ARE SUNK BY SUBMARINES

London Reports One German Diver Sunk and Another Ramm'd and Probably Destroyed—French Make Further Gains on Western Front.

London, Aug. 21.—Two British light cruisers, the Nottingham and Falmouth, were sunk Saturday in the North sea by German submarines while the vessels were searching for the German high seas fleet, according to an official announcement issued by the admiralty.

One German submarine was destroyed by the British, while another was rammed and possibly sunk.

The German squadron contained about fifteen warships and was accompanied by two Zeppelins.

The fleet was sighted in the region of White Bank early Saturday. It was headed in a northeasterly course.

"Reports from our lookout squadrons and other units showed that there was considerable activity on the part of the enemy in the North sea Saturday, Aug. 19," the British report says.

"The German high seas fleet came out, but, learning from their scouts that the British forces were in considerable strength, the enemy avoided an engagement and returned to port.

"In searching for the enemy we lost two cruisers by submarine attacks—H. M. S. Nottingham, Captain C. B. Miller, and H. M. S. Falmouth, Captain John Edwards.

Most of the Crews Saved.

"All the officers of the former were saved, but thirty-eight of the crew are missing. All the officers and men of the Falmouth were saved, but one leading stoker, Norman Fry, died of injuries.

"An enemy submarine was destroyed and another was rammed and possibly sunk.

"There is no truth in the German statement that a British destroyer was sunk and a British battleship damaged."

The Nottingham was a vessel of 5,400 tons and was built in Pembroke in 1913. Its complement was 389 men. It was 430 feet long and carried nine six-inch guns, four three-pounders and two torpedo tubes. It was designed to make about twenty-five knots an hour.

The Falmouth was of 5,250 tons. It was built in 1910 and carried a crew of 376 officers and men. It was 450 feet long and carried eight six-inch guns, four three-pounders and two torpedo tubes. In its trial trips it made slightly more than twenty-seven knots an hour.

FRENCH PRESSING FORWARD

Capture Strongly Fortified Wood From the Germans.

London, Aug. 21.—On the western front the French continue to press forward in the neighborhood of Guillemont and Paris reports the capture of a strongly fortified wood between that town and Maurepas. In the Verdun sector the Germans are fiercely counter attacking in an effort to regain Fleury, the loss of which they concede. The British report the repulse of German counter attacks and the capture of a portion of trenches north of Bazentin-LePetit.

In the East the Russians apparently are centering their efforts on their new drive toward Kovell.

Berlin admits that General Brusiloff's troops have crossed the Stokhod at one point and Petrograd says that the Russians have pushed on beyond the river and captured a series of heights on the road to Kovell.

Fierce fighting continues on the crest of the Carpathians, where the Russians are battling within sight of the Hungarian plains. Nothing has been given, however, of the strength of the forces engaged in this region and it is uncertain as yet whether General Brusiloff is making a serious effort to invade Hungary.

The offensive on the Saloniki front is slowly developing and the fight is growing in intensity on the 150-mile battle line from Lake Presba to Lake Doiran.

E. P. RIPLEY.

President of Santa Fe Hopes Men Will Strike.

Chicago, Aug. 21.—President Wilson's plan for adjustment of the questions is no more than an invitation to the railroads to surrender, E. P. Ripley, president of the Santa Fe, said here before leaving for Washington.

When asked if he had any hope of a settlement Mr. Ripley said:

"Yes, I have hopes—I hope the men will strike. If a small number of men can block the country's business the country ought to know it. The sooner the better. That condition ought to be defeated at once, and decisively."

Washington, Aug. 21.—Senator Sherman's recent attack upon Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, was denounced by Senator Reed of Missouri, who declared it unfortunate that any senator should have reflected upon Mr. Gompers, who was "never known to commit an unlawful act and is recognized as the most conservative leader of labor."

Senator Sherman replied to Senator Reed with spirit.

"If the laws of duelling were still in force," Senator Sherman said, "I would say to Mr. Gompers that I do not fight with anybody except some one of my own class."

The Illinois senator further attacked Mr. Gompers for alleged political activity, declaring he was "a parasite upon the body of labor, a creeping poison ivy on the whole structure of industry."

FRENCH STOP ATTACK SHORT

(By United Press)

PRODUCTION OF IRON ORE

Minnesota Mine Output for Year May
Show Increase.

St. Paul, Aug. 21.—According to a statement issued by State Auditor J. A. O. Preus a new high record will be set this year in Minnesota production of iron ore, despite reductions attributed to the strike on the Mesabi range.

The auditor estimates that 1916 shipments from Minnesota mines collectively will reach or exceed 40,000,000 tons, compared with the previous high record of 36,338,264 tons in 1913.

PRESIDENT WILL
SEIZE RAILWAYSDrastic Action to Be Taken if Strike Results.

BILL READY FOR CONGRESS

Wilson is Said to Have Requested the Attorney General to Prepare Measure Providing for Operation of the Lines Temporarily on an Eight-Hour Basis.

Washington, Aug. 21.—Congress may be asked by the president to provide for government operation of the railroads if the present temporary deadlock should not be adjusted.

It is understood from well informed sources that the attorney general has drafted a bill at the request of the president whereby this government would take over the railroads temporarily under some kind of forced draft of officers and employees, analogous to a draft of soldiers in time of war, and operate them.

It is said that this proposed law is considered justified under the welfare clause of the Constitution.

It would be virtually a club over the heads of the railroad officials, however, since they would have to accept the eight-hour principle during government operation, and it would have to be effective until a settlement was reached.

President Wilson, after a week of conference, is believed by all parties to the controversy to have brought the situation to a point where decisive developments may be expected within a few days.

Negotiations at Standstill.

While the negotiations took no actual forward step the president replied indirectly to contentions of the road officials that the principle of arbitration would be endangered by his plan for putting the eight-hour basic day into effect while a commission investigates its practicability.

In a telegram made public at the White House the president declared he held firmly to arbitration as a principle and that his plan strengthened rather than weakened it.

He said also that some means must be found to prevent the existing situation from ever arising again.

Meantime the road officials, who have tentatively refused to accept Mr. Wilson's proposal, continued conferences among themselves. Labor leaders, who already have approved the proposal, marked time awaiting a definite decision from the employers.

The president's telegram defending his plan was in reply to an appeal from George Pope, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, urging that the principle of arbitration be preserved in the strike negotiations.

CROPS OF NORTHWEST
FACE CAR SHORTAGE

Portland, Ore., Aug. 21.—Oregon, Washington and Idaho will have 50,000,000 bushels of wheat to move to the Atlantic seaboard within the next six months, and almost no cars are in sight to move it, according to a comprehensive survey by local railroad men.

The railroads will be called on to provide about 38,500 cars, the average capacity of a car being 1,300 bushels.

Virtually all the grain of the Northwest this year, except that needed for domestic consumption, will move eastward by rail.

The European war has made it an economical impossibility to plan on getting ships enough to handle the export wheat—the usual channel for the movement.

The Western roads are complaining that the Eastern roads are tying up the cars and that 80 per cent are held in Eastern territory.

MINISTER DENIES MISAP-

PRaises Samuel Gompers

Senator Reed of Missouri Replies to Illinois Lawmaker.

Washington, Aug. 21.—Senator Sherman's recent attack upon Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, was denounced by Senator Reed of Missouri, who declared it unfortunate that any senator should have reflected upon Mr.
Gompers, who was "never known to commit an unlawful act and is recognized as the most conservative leader of labor."

Senator Sherman replied to Senator Reed with spirit.

"If the laws of duelling were still in force," Senator Sherman said, "I would say to Mr. Gompers that I do not fight with anybody except some one of my own class."

The Illinois senator further attacked Mr. Gompers for alleged political activity, declaring he was "a parasite upon the body of labor, a creeping poison ivy on the whole structure of industry."

FRENCH STOP ATTACK SHORT

(By United Press)
Paris, Aug. 21.—An official statement says that the Germans made a second desperate attempt to recapture Fleury, three and a half miles northeast of Verdun, attacking it in force after spraying the French positions with liquid fire.
The French infantry stopped the attack short inflicting serious losses to the enemy.

BULGARIANS CAPTURE VILLAGE

(By United Press)
Berlin, Aug. 21.—An official statement says that the Bulgarians captured the village of Vichille, in the southwest of Florina. They stormed and captured another Serbian position at Matkiszplannini.

GREEK CABINET CALLED

(By United Press)
Athens, Aug. 21.—The Bulgarians are reported to be within 10 miles of the Greek port of Kavalo in their advance to attack the right wing of the allies. The Greek cabinet has been called in special session on account of the Bulgarian advance in Greek territory.

STUBBORN FIGHTING SUNDAY

(By United Press)
Solonika, Aug. 21.—The Bulgarian forces are advancing south of the Greek town of Glorina, despite of Serbian resistance. There was stubborn fighting Sunday near Banitz.

PRODUCTION OF IRON ORE

Minnesota Mine Output for Year May
Show Increase.

St. Paul, Aug. 21.—According to a statement issued by State Auditor J.
A. O. Preus a new high record will be set this year in Minnesota production of iron ore, despite reductions attributed to the strike on the Mesabi range.

The auditor estimates that 1916 shipments from Minnesota mines collectively will reach or exceed 40,000,000 tons, compared with the previous high record of 36,338,264 tons in 1913.

PRESIDENT WILL SEIZE RAILWAYS

Drastic Action to Be Taken if Strike Results.

BILL READY FOR CONGRESS

Wilson Is Said to Have Requested the Attorney General to Prepare Measure Providing for Operation of the Lines Temporarily on an Eight-Hour Basis.

Washington, Aug. 21.—Congress may be asked by the president to provide for government operation of the railroads if the present temporary deadlock should not be adjusted.

It is understood from well informed sources that the attorney general has drafted a bill at the request of the president whereby this government would take over the railroads temporarily under some kind of forced draft of officers and employees, analogous to a draft of soldiers in time of war, and operate them.

It is said that this proposed law is considered justified under the welfare clause of the Constitution.

It would be virtually a club over the heads of the railroad officials, however, since they would have to accept the eight-hour principle during government operation, and it would have to be effective until a settlement was reached.

President Wilson, after a week of conference, is believed by all parties to the controversy to have brought the situation to a point where decisive developments may be expected within a few days.

Negotiations at Standstill.

While the negotiations took no actual forward step the president replied indirectly to contentions of the road officials that the principle of arbitration would be endangered by his plan for putting the eight-hour basic day into effect while a commission investigates its practicability.

In a telegram made public at the White House the president declared he held firmly to arbitration as a principle and that his plan strengthened rather than weakened it.

He said also that some means must be found to prevent the existing situation from ever arising again.

Meantime the road officials, who have tentatively refused to accept Mr.
Wilson's proposal, continued conferences among themselves. Labor leaders, who already have approved the proposal, marked time awaiting a definite decision from the employers.

The president's telegram defending his plan was in reply to an appeal from George Pope, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, urging that the principle of arbitration be preserved in the strike negotiations.

CROPS OF NORTHWEST FACE CAR SHORTAGE

Portland, Ore., Aug. 21.—Oregon,
Washington and Idaho will have 50-000,000 bushels of wheat to move to the Atlantic seaboard within the next six months, and almost no cars are in sight to move it, according to a comprehensive survey by local railroad men.

The railroads will be called on to provide about 38,500 cars, the average capacity of a car being 1,300 bushels.

Virtually all the grain of the Northwest this year, except that needed for domestic consumption, will move eastward by rail.

The European war has made it an economical impossibility to plan on getting ships enough to handle the export wheat—the usual channel for the movement.

The Western roads are complaining that the Eastern roads are tying up the cars and that 80 per cent are held in Eastern territory.

MINISTER DENIES MISAP-PROPRIATING FUNDS.

New York, Aug. 21.—Rev.
Charles T. Baylis, director general of the allies' hospital relief commission, pleaded not guilty to three indictments charging him with misappro-priating funds of the commission and was released under $2,500 bail.

Dr. Baylis was indicted as a result of efforts to trace donations of $7,000.

pleasure in his work. The idea of joy in one's work has been often ridiculed, but nevertheless it is fast taking root in the minds of many and proving its value and merit. To perform the day's work joyfully and jayously may not be possible, in cases, without effort, but the fact is being realized more and more that it is very much worth while to develop the habit.Overpowered."Are you sure you are strong enough

The grate was filled with silver and that "the organized force of Rome consisted of a regular army that at no time seems to have exceeded 275,000 men." That is less than the army either of Greece or of Bulgaria, yet the Roman empire of that time stretched from the Fifth of Forth to the Persian gulf. The provinces consented to Roman rule because it gave them good government, undisturbed order and an unequalled system of law and justice.

—Youth's Companion."The Laocoon."The famous work "The Laocoon" was modeled by the great artists of Rhodes about A. D. 70. It represents the death of the Trojan hero Laocoon, priest of Neptune, and his two sons, as described by Vergil. It was discovered near Rome in 1506 and purchased by Pope Julius II. It is now in the Vatican. "The Laocoon" like "Hamlet," has provoked a world of comment,
but all agree that it is one of the masterpieces of artistic expression.—New

On a Floating Temple In Sumida River a Priest of Tokyo, With His Flock, Offered Prayers For the Souls of Soldiers Dead Because of Wars.Unusual preparations were made one morning in Shussanji, or the Geling Out of the Mountain temple, a quaint little place of worship hidden away in a labyrinth of crooked streets in a poor quarter of Tokyo—preparations for a celebration on the Sumida river to pray for the repose of the souls of all those slain in battle regardless of nationality and to scatter scraps of paper bearing the image of Jizo Sama over the waves, one for each departed spirit.The chief priest, an aged man, with his assistant and the supporters of the temple, had been busy for days in advance, and all was ready. The red and gold altar of Shussanji was heaped up with offerings of rice and fruit, and a plain wooden tablet had been placed there bearing the words:"To console all those souls who have passed into the beyond because of war."The old priest, his bald head shining, clad in his coarse cotton robe of gray, officiated before the altar, and when the last prayers were uttered the people formed a procession to the Sumida river, a short distance away.Near a bridge an unusual craft was waiting, a deep cargo junk roofed over with canvas bearing bold black Buddhist symbols, and at the bow fluttered a white cotton banner on which was written in large black characters:"A service to console the spirits of the whole world's departed ones."Quickly the parishioners embarked and squatted down upon the cushions spread over the bottom of the boat, and the priest, the central figure in the religious ceremony, as gray and faded as the robes he wore, took up his position in front of the altar. A piece of soiled embroidery did duty for an altar cloth, and there was set up a tarnished statue of Jizo Sama. Just below were three wooden tablets. The central one read,
"Pray for the whole world's departed ones' souls." The others had inscriptions asking for prayers for the Japanese army and for prayers for the allies of Japan.The priest placed some sweet scented squares of incense upon the coals in a small brass brazier, and as the clouds rose into the air the boatman with his bamboo pole pushed off from the shore and the holy man's voice was heard chanting—all the worshippers, old men and young, men and children, murmuring in an undertone, "Name Amida Butsu!"Out upon the Sumida river the ceremony of scattering the papers was begun. Old and young with their hands folded over the sides of the junk, throwing away the sacred papers with the effigy of Jizo Sama stamped thereon, each meant for the repose of the soul of some soldier slain in battle.Those who have mourned dear ones slain in war would have been touched to the quick by this simple service of humble Japanese people given for all that great host of unknown who have laid down their lives for their countries.And, while the priest intoned, the incense rose into the air, the metal and the wooden drums were beaten, the worshippers chanted unceasingly, and the squares of paper fluttered out of the boat on all sides and were carried away by the wind over the water to make a long wake behind the vessel.For three hours the temple junk floated down the river, the papers falling noiselessly over the waves as the banks of the Sumida were passed.A halt was made at noon, when thin white wooden boxes filled with rice and vegetables were brought out, while an old woman brewed the tea over a little charcoal fire.The spot at which the stop had been made was a sacred one, for in that exact place a Jizo Sama stone had been buried under the water. Here afterthe simple meal a special service was held before the boat returned upstream, and a long, narrow piece of wood was driven into the sandy bottom of the bay. The inscription upon it read literally as follows:"Herewith the service is held for the whole world its departed soldiers to console."—London Times.Paralyzed Him.

JOY IN ONE'S WORK.

Every person should take a pleasure in his work. The idea of joy in one's work has been often ridiculed, but nevertheless it is fast taking root in the minds of many and proving its value and merit. To perform the day's work joyfully and joyously may not be possible, in cases, without effort, but the fact is being realized more and more that it is very much worth while to develop the habit.

Ancient Rome's Army.

It is an astonishing thing to be told that "the organized force of Rome consisted of a regular army that at no time seems to have exceeded 275,000 men." That is less than the army either of Greece or of Bulgaria, yet the Roman empire of that time stretched from the Firth of Forth to the Persian gulf. The provinces consented to Roman rule because it gave them good government, undisturbed order and an unequalled system of law and justice.—Youth's Companion.

"The Laocoon."

The famous work "The Laocoon" was modeled by the great artists of Rhodes about A. D. 70. It represents the death of the Trojan hero Laocoon, priest of Neptune, and his two sons, as described by Vergil. It was discovered near Rome in 1506 and purchased by Pope Julius II. It is now in the Vatican. "The Laocoon," like "Hamlet," has provoked a world of comment, but all agree that it is one of the masterpieces of artistic expression.—New York American.

On a Floating Temple in Sumida River a Priest of Tokyo, With His Flock, Offered Prayers For the Souls of Soldiers Dead Because of Wars.

Unusual preparations were made one morning in Shussanji, or the Going Out of the Mountain temple, a quaint little place of worship hidden away in a labyrinth of crooked streets in a poor quarter of Tokyo—preparations for a celebration on the Sumida river to pray for the repose of the souls of all those slain in battle regardless of nationality and to scatter scraps of paper bearing the image of Jizo Sama over the waves, one for each departed spirit.

The chief priest, an aged man, with his assistant and the supporters of the temple, had been busy for days in advance, and all was ready. The red and gold altar of Shussanji was heaped up with offerings of rice and fruit, and a plain wooden tablet had been placed there bearing the words:

"To console all those souls who have passed into the beyond because of war."

The old priest, his bald head shining, clad in his coarse cotton robe of gray, officiated before the altar, and when the last prayers were uttered the people formed a procession to the Sumida river, a short distance away.

Near a bridge an unusual craft was waiting, a deep cargo junk roofed over with canvas bearing bold black Buddhist symbols, and at the bow fluttered a white cotton banner on which was written in large black characters:

"A service to console the spirits of the whole world's departed ones."

Quickly the parishioners embarked and squatted down upon the cushions spread over the bottom of the boat, and the priest, the central figure in the religious ceremony, as gray and faded as the robes he wore, took up his position in front of the altar. A piece of soiled embroidery did duty for an altar cloth, and there was set up a tarnished statue of Jizo Sama. Just below were three wooden tablets. The central one read, "Pray for the whole world's departed ones' souls." The others had inscriptions asking for prayers for the Japanese army and for prayers for the allies of Japan.

The priest placed some sweet scented squares of incense upon the coals in a small brass brazier, and as the clouds rose into the air the boatman with his bamboo pole pushed off from the shore and the holy man's voice was heard chanting—all the worshippers, old women and young, men and children, murmuring in an undertone, "Name Amida Butsun."

Out upon the Sumida river the ceremony of scattering the papers was begun. Old and young with their hands full leaned over the sides of the junk, throwing away the sacred papers with the effigy of Jizo Sama stamped thereon, each meant for the repose of the soul of some soldier slain in battle.

Those who have mourned dear ones slain in war would have been touched to the quick by this simple service of humble Japanese people given for all that great host of unknown who have laid down their lives for their countries.

And, while the priest intoned, the incense rose into the air, the metal and the wooden drums were beaten, the worshippers chanted unceasingly, and the squares of paper fluttered out of the boat on all sides and were carried away by the wind over the water to make a long wake behind the vessel.

For three hours the temple junk floated down the river, the papers falling noiselessly over the waves as the banks of the Sumida were passed. A bait was made at noon, when thin white wooden boxes filled with rice and vegetables were brought out, while an old woman brewed the tea over a little charcoal fire.

The spot at which the stop had been made was a sacred one, for in that exact place a Jizo Sama stone had been buried under the water. Here after the simple meal a special service was held before the boat returned upstream, and a long, narrow piece of wood was driven into the sandy bottom of the bay. The inscription upon it read literally as follows:

"Herewith the service is held for the whole world its departed soldiers to console."—London Times.

THE CHAUTAUQUA CLOSES SESSION

Five Days Last Week Brought to Brainerd Series of Good Attractions Enjoyed by All

CHAUTAUQUA FOR NEXT YEAR

Rev. W. E. Dudley, Superintendent, Preached in Brainerd and Barrows Churches

Brainerd's season of Chautauqua, five days, closed Sunday evening with the performance of the Christine Giles company. Assurances are given that enough support has been secured to continue the Chautauqua next year.

In his plea to the audience Saturday night the manager exhibited the check of Albert Angel for $20 worth of tickets for next season and he praised Mr. Angel for the public spirit shown.

Rev. W. E. Dudley, pastor of the Federated Churches of Lakota, N. D., and superintendent of the Redpath-Vawter Chautauqua, preached morning and evening in the First Methodist church and also spoke at Barrows, the attendance in both churches being large. Rev. F. W. Hill, pastor of the local Methodist church, was called to Atkinson and occupied Dr. Villar's pulpit.

Saturday evening was one of unalloyed pleasure for the little ones and it pleased the older folks too. Astounding feats of legerdemain were shown by Ducrot, prince of magicians and illusionists. Still it would be unfair to class Ducrot simply as a magician, for he is much more. He is a born entertainer. The youngsters were delighted and at the conclusion some fortunate little boy and some happy little girl drew a bunny each.

The Bohannons Saturday afternoon and evening were heard in amusing sketches and captured the favor of the audience. In the afternoon entertainment they gave melodious vocal duets, tenor solos, soprano solos, interpretative readings, clever impersonations and pianologues. In the evening they gave their special one-act play, "The Matrimonial Venture," which abounded in sweet music, odd situations and an abundant of classy humor, pleasing all.

Dr. James L. Gordon spoke Saturday afternoon. He has won immense success in Canada and now has resigned a pastorate in Winnipeg. He is called "Canada's Greatest Preacher," and is a rapid fire orator like Hillis. Every movement and utterance suggested rugged strength.

On Sunday the Christine Giles company made every one forget his troubles. It is an organization that devotes all its energies and genius to the art of entertainment. They were heard afternoon and evening.

B. F. McDonald in the afternoon spoke on "Moonshine." A good many things in this world are pure moonshine. In private and public life, in all vocations, in society, in church and in every other human activity there is a vast amount of pretense and show. McDonald called it moonshine and laid bare some of its worst aspects.

To Keep Goldfish Healthy.
Goldfish may be kept healthy by giving them a salt bath about every two weeks. Do it in this way: Put a teaspoonful of salt in a quart of clear water and place the fish in it for fifteen minutes—no longer. When changing the water in the aquarium, a small wire strainer will be found a great convenience. Pour all the water from the goldfish bowl, with the fish, into a basin. Rinse the bowl, dry it, fill with fresh water and with the wire strainer pick up the goldfish and drop them back into the bowl. Aquariums should be kept in a cool place and not exposed to the direct rays of the sun. Feed the fish every other morning, allowing six or eight fish one-fourth of a sheet of food cut in small pieces. Sick fish have often become strong and healthy after a few salt baths.

DRAMA OF OTHER DAYS

"In Old Kentucky" at Brainerd Opera House Depicts Scenes of 20 Years Ago

It has been a season for "melodrama" in the theaters and the poor word has been tremendously strained to cover all the different kinds of shows that have had to be included in this all-embracing title. We have seen modern detective melodrama, society melodrama, English melodrama, humorous melodrama and half a dozen variations. It remains for "In Old Kentucky" however, to bring back the real old-fashioned American melodrama, the kind that packs the big theaters, the kind that old people—as we of today call them—go to see again and wipe their eyes not so much at the pathos of the actors as at the memories the old play revives.

But the newer generation of theater-goers should not imagine for a moment that "In Old Kentucky" is not a delightful entertainment even in these biased and cynical days. Doubtless there are certain crudenesses of construction that would not be tolerated in a modern play, doubtless there is often an over emphasis on certain emotional situations, doubtless the actors from necessity, and because it is a part of the play, declaim certain lines in a manner to make the worldly-wise auditor smile at and not with the speaker; but the love of excitement and the love of lovers is ever present, and the couplet, "True hearts are more than coronets," always gets its answering thrill, even from the man who has never stopped to think what the words mean. Many people who have forgotten that a man named W. D. Howells ever existed, still read Fenimore Cooper. There are plenty of women who openly admit their addiction to periodical doses of Jane Eyre, and men who would do the same if they told the truth.

And so Joe Lorey, the young moonshiner, has the sympathy of the audience when he makes love to Madge, the flower of the mountains, even though every one knows his suit is hopeless. One waits in tense silence while he shoots away the bridge over which she must come to help young Frank Layson lying unconscious and there is a vast sigh of relief when Madge swings herself across the chasm by the severed rope and throws the sputtering bomb into the gulf before it explodes. It is hard not to begin wondering what would happen if she were ever too late and the bomb burst in her hands.

And again good old Colonel Sandusky Doolittle quite wins the hearts of his auditors today as he did twenty years ago, particularly when he forswears attendance at the race tracks and limits himself to three juleps a day—"on the honah of a Kaintuckian, mam"—at the behest of the lady it took him 20 years to propose to. And its the same with the homely humors of Neb, the old family servant, who dates from "befo de wah", and the villany of Horace Holton as black as his whiskers.

Everybody knows exactly just how that race is going to come out and everybody knows who the jockey is and so forth, but it holds its excitement and the man who doesn't find it amusing and interesting and even a bit touching is keeping himself blasé or "highbrow" out of pure obstinacy. Then there is the piccaninny band which is always welcome and which plays as if it couldn't get out of swing if the earth blew up, and the skylarking of the "niggers" in the beginning of the second act which always brings its roars of laughter.

"In Old Kentucky," along with a few others—very few—of the old time plays, is an institution. Its something like the "sulphur an' lasses" our grandmothers used to prescribe in the spring. Perhaps we don't need it every year, but its good for use to have it every once in a while and its still better than many

FOR HOUSEHOLD PACKING.

Autumn Brings Its Bugbear of Pulling Up Stakes.

When one must move, begin with the small, out of sight tasks that will not render the house untidy and uncomfortable long before leaving it. A little thought and a look around the house will disclose many of the belongings that are not in general use—for instance, stuff in the pantry, in the storeroom, superabundant grocery supplies, temporarily discarded clothing, superfluous ornaments, company porcelain and glassware, books, music and a thousand other things, all of which can be dislodged without destroying the appearance of the house while those abiding in the same will not be the wiser for it.

For packing kitchen utensils, jars of fruit, etc., tubs are best, for they have handles. A pot or kettle in the bottom might have several jars placed in it with bits of paper, hay or smaller articles, like knives and forks, to hold them steady, but be careful not to have anything to extend higher than the sides of the tub.

Barrels are best for the fine china and glass ware. When packing breakables, remember that every article must be prepared so that none of its surface is left exposed to pressure without support. Stuff all hollow articles as full as possible, surround all handles, stems, etc., by padding so thick that the article becomes, as nearly as possible, a solid ball. Cups and glasses should not be slipped inside each other unless well covered with padding. Plates and saucers may be made in a pile with stuffing between and the whole made solid by bands of muslin wound round them. Excelsior, hay and newspapers are all good packing material, but often kitchen towels, holders, underwear, etc., may be used to steady things and get themselves transported at the same time.

The Farsighted Woman.

You are, let us say, a capable stenographer or a teacher. If through any untoward circumstances you should be bereft of one of the faculties necessary to your vocation, what would you do? Such things do happen, you know, and wise is the woman who cultivates a hobby or a vocation that employs other faculties than the ones she uses daily. If you know nothing else but teaching and should suddenly lose your hearing you would be stranded on the island of the helpless. If your daily work is of the manual sort, cultivate a hobby for something that requires mental effort. If your mental faculties are in use daily, give them a rest by doing some sort of manual work. Not only will you feel fresher in doing your own work, but you will have taken the first step in preparing yourself for any contingency that the future may hold.

Crusading Around.

"Where is Mr. Flubdub?"
"Crusading around somewhere in the business section."

FOR EARLY FALL.

A Chic Tam on Autumn Lines For Juveniles.

Among advanced millinery styles for the autumn are several combinations of straw and wintry looking materials, a sort of compromise between seasons. Such a hat is this toque, which has a straw rim of black milan and a tam of black pressed beaver, banded with black grosgrain ribbon and a perky bow. This is the kind of slip-on hat so serviceable till you see exactly what you want for genuine fall weather.

Tattooing Medallion.

With shuttle make a ring of 10 p separated by 2 s, fasten (using ball and shuttle). With shuttle make a ring of 3 p separated by 3 s, fastening the middle p to one of the ring of 10 just made. ### Separate Skirts.

Striped skirts still have a strong vogue and are shown in various widths, the blazer and awning stripes having by far the strongest call. Novelty striped worsteds and a few checks are included in some of the latest models.

USES FOR MINT.

Be Ingenious if You Would Wring All Its Flavor.

There are innumerable ways in which the ever present spearmint bed ought to be utilized besides for the regular mint jelly, tea or punch.

First.—Boil a sprig with new potatoes, beans or peas.

Second.—In spicing young beets add a sprig to the heated vinegar and spices, or in canning the same simply lay a few leaves in the top of the can before sealing.

Third.—Chop finely and sprinkle, just before serving, over an iced fruit compote or over a sweet fruit salad.

Fourth.—Used in the same way over a chicken or veal salad it gives a decidedly piquant flavor.

Fifth.—Add, chopped fine, as you would parsley, to deviled eggs or ham.

Sixth.—Chop coarsely and add three heaping tablespoonsful to one-half cup weak vinegar with brown sugar to taste, to serve with roast lamb.

Seventh.—Last, there is no greater delicacy than candied mint leaves if one has the patience to make them successfully.

THE ENCHANTED SHELL.

Myra wandered along the beach, wishing very much that she might see a mermaid, or a merman, or at the very least a sea serpent. She was lonely and wanted something exciting to happen.

"If only the days of fairy tales were not over!" she sighed as she sat down in the hollow of the rocks and rested her curly head against some lovely seaweed dried by the sun. As she looked dreamily out to sea she was startled to hear some one singing close to her ear:

"Oh, don't you know the way
To the land of elf and fay,
To that fair strand of golden sand
Where it is always day?
Then follow, follow me
To my cove beneath the sea."

Myra delightedly raised her head to find that the song seemed to come from the mouth of a large conch shell lying close to her. As she gazed the shell grew larger and yet larger until it opened invitingly to her.

"Oh, this is too lovely!" cried the little girl, tripping into the shell without much hesitation.

As she tripped down the mysterious passage of the seashell the light grew more and more rosy, the music more beautiful. It was indeed like a song from fairyland which still led her on.

Suddenly the hall widened into a marvelous green chamber, in which grew wonderful sea flowers. On a throne made of pearl sat a very lovely lady, with long golden hair, pink cheeks, smiling eyes, robed in green with trimming of fluffy white, like the crest of a wave.

"You are right welcome, my child," she said to Myra, who stood abashed before such beauty. "I am the spirit of the seashell, and it is my voice which sings to little children whenever they bend their heads to listen. They who hear my song are never lonely again. They realize that the world of fairy lies very close to them."

As she spoke soft music sounded, and Myra seemed to be lifted up, up, up, until she found herself lying on the rocks just as she was when she first heard the song of the shell. As she sat up she caught sight of the shell and, snatching it up, carried it home with her, remembering the words of the fairy, "Those who hear my song will never be lonely again."

JUVENILE STYLES.

How Young Girls Are Being Garbed a la Mode.

Long coats, which reach almost or to the dress hems, are the fashion for little girls. Made of faille silk in dull light blues, pinks, corn color or royal blue, they are just the right weight to wear over the lingerie dresses of batiste or georgette crepe.

The older girl's coat is made more like the adult styles. Trecot serge, wool jersey or bolivia—a new weave that resembles somewhat chinchilla cloth—are used to make long coats that often have a pelierne cape addition that reaches to or below the elbows.

Middy blouse lines are idealized now for the betwixt and between girl. Combined with plaited or gored skirts, they make very trim looking frocks, suited for autumn school wear as well as for summer. Ponce, tussore, linen, la jerez and other fabrics are used for the summer dresses and wool jersey, serge and gaberdine for the autumn school frock.

These dresses are sometimes made sleeveless so that a washable guimpe may be easily adjusted and removed. Plaited collar and cuff frills are seen on these guimpes more often than lace, the edges finished with pleat or hemstitching. Chaille, a material which always seems to stay in style for young girls' frocks, seems to need a touch of black velvet ribbon for a dainty finish.

Russian and middie blouses, seen in the shops, are generally accompanied by a plaited or fullied matching skirt. In middie blouse types one of polka dotted raspberry lawn has a full gathered skirt. The blouse is fashioned with a round plaited collar of white organdie, pleat edged, with cuffs to match. An organdie belt is the original note of this dress. It shows only at the sides, passing through slashes in the dress in front and back.

This belt fastens at one side with two flat pearl buttons. One Russian blouse dress of pink voile is bordered and belted with matching bands of linen. The skirt is gathered and has a deep hem band of the linen.

Another dull pink Russian dress of pink linen is belted and bordered with a cream rough linen band, the blouse fastens down the front with buttons placed opposite and linked together.

Very pretty bright colored felt hats are also seen in the shops for little and big girls. They match in color the bright tones of their dresses. Small poke bonnet forms, rather jockey shaped, with a single feather or plume ornament in front, are also new. High Russian caps, covered with gathered silk, are finished with silk pompons on top and little clusters of silk roses posed at the sides.

Dresses for young girls remain very short. In extreme fashion they hardly come to the knee, while the more popular styles stop just below. Their amplexness makes them fly out prettily. The revived fashion of petticoats, which show with the swirl of skirts, gives them a fluffy look.

THE CHAUTAUQUA CLOSES SESSION

Five Days Last Week Brought to Brainerd Series of Good Attractions Enjoyed by All

CHAUTAUQUA FOR NEXT YEAR

Rev. W. E. Dudley, Superintendent, Preached in Brainerd and Barrows Churches

Brainerd's season of Chautauqua, five days, closed Sunday evening with the performance of the Christine Gies company. Assurances are given that enough support has been secured to continue the Chautauqua next year.

In his plea to the audience Saturday night the manager exhibited the check of Albert Angel for $20 worth of tickets for next season and he praised Mr. Angel for the public spirit shown.

Rev. W. E. Dudley, pastor of the Federated Churches of Lakota, N. D., and superintendent of the Redpath-Vawter Chautauqua, preached morning and evening in the First Methodist church and also spoke at Barrows, the attendance in both churches being large. Rev. F. W. Hill, pastor of the local Methodist church, was called to Atkin and occupied Dr. Villar's pulpit.

Saturday evening was one of unalloyed pleasure for the little ones and it pleased the older folks too. Astounding feats of legerdemain were shown by Ducrot, prince of magicians and illusionists. Still it would be unfair to class Ducrot simply as a magician, for he is much more. He is a born entertainer. The youngsters were delighted and at the conclusion some fortunate little boy and some happy little girl drew a bunny each.

The Bohannons Saturday afternoon and evening were heard in amusing sketches and captured the favor of the audience. In the afternoon entertainment they gave melodious vocal duets, tenor solos, soprano solos, interpretative readings, clever impersonations and planologues. In the evening they gave their special one-act play, "The Matrimonial Venture," which abounded in sweet music, odd situations and an abundant of classy humor, pleasing all.

Dr. James L. Gordon spoke Saturday afternoon. He has won immense success in Canada and now has resigned a pastorate in Winnipeg. He is called "Canada's Greatest Preacher," and is a rapid fire orator like Hillis. Every movement and utterance suggested rugged strength.

On Sunday the Christine Gies company made every one forget his troubles. It is an organization that devotes all its energies and genius to the art of entertainment. They were heard afternoon and evening.

B. F. McDonald in the afternoon spoke on "Moonshine." A good many things in this world are pure moonshine. In private and public life, in all vocations, in society, in church and in every other human activity there is a vast amount of pretense and show. McDonald called it moonshine and laid bare some of its worst aspects.

To Keep Goldfish Healthy.
Goldfish may be kept healthy by giving them a salt bath about every two weeks. Do it in this way: Put a teaspoonful of salt in a quart of clear water and place the fish in it for fifteen minutes—no longer. When changing the water in the aquarium, a small wire strainer will be found a great convenience. Pour all the water from the goldfish bowl, with the fish, into a basin. Rinse the bowl, dry it, fill with fresh water and with the wire strainer pick up the goldfish and drop them back into the bowl. Aquariums should be kept in a cool place and not exposed to the direct rays of the sun. Feed the fish every other morning, allowing six or eight fish one-fourth of a sheet of food cut in small pieces. Sick fish have often become strong and healthy after a few salt baths.

DRAMA OF OTHER DAYS

It has been a season for "melodrama" in the theaters and the poor word has been tremendously strained to cover all the different kinds of shows that have had to be included in this all-embracing title. We have seen modern detective melodrama, society melodrama, English melodrama, humorous melodrama and half a dozen variations. It remains for "In Old Kentucky" however, to bring back the real old-fashioned American melodrama, the kind that packs the big theaters, the kind that old people—as we of today call them—go to see again and wipe their eyes not so much at the pathos of the actors as at the memories the old play revives.

But the newer generation of theater-goers should not imagine for a moment that "In Old Kentucky" is not a delightful entertainment even in these blase and cynical days. Doubtless there are certain crudenesses of construction that would not be tolerated in a modern play, doubtless there is often an over emphasis on certain emotional situations, doubtless the actors from necessity, and because it is a part of the play, declaim certain lines in a manner to make the worldly-wise auditor smile at and not with the speaker; but the love of excitement and the love of lovers is ever present, and the couplet, "True hearts are more than coronets," always gets its answering thrill, even from the man who has never stopped to think what the words mean. Many people who have forgotten that a man named W. D. Howells ever existed, still read Fenimore Cooper. There are plenty of women who openly admit their addiction to periodical doses of Jane Eyre, and men who would do the same if they told the truth.

And so Joe Lorey, the young moonshiner, has the sympathy of the audience when he makes love to Madge, the flower of the mountains, even though every one knows his suit is hopeless. One waits in tense silence while he shoots away the bridge over which she must come to help young Frank Layson lying unconscious and there is a vast sigh of relief when Madge swings herself across the chasm by the severed rope and throws the sputtering bomb into the gulf before it explodes. It is hard not to begin wondering what would happen if she were ever too late and the bomb burst in her hands.

And again good old Colonel Sandusky Doolittle quite wins the hearts of his auditors today as he did twenty years ago, particularly when he forswears attendance at the race tracks and limits himself to three juleps a day—"on the honah of a Kaintuckian, mam"—at the behest of the lady it took him 20 years to propose to. And its the same with the homely humors of Neb, the old family servant, who dates from "before wah", and the villany of Horace Holton as black as his whiskers.

Everybody knows exactly just how that race is going to come out and everybody knows who the jockey is and so forth, but it holds its excitement and the man who doesn't find it amusing and interesting and even a bit touching is keeping himself blase or "highbrow" out of pure obstinacy. Then there is the picaresque innuendo which is always welcome and which plays as if it couldn't get out of swing if the earth blew up, and the skylarking of the "niggers" in the beginning of the second act which always brings its roars of laughter.

"In Old Kentucky," along with a few others—very few—of the old time plays, is an institution. Its something like the "sulphur an' 'lasses" our grandmothers used to prescribe in the spring. Perhaps we don't need it every year, but its good for use to have it every once in a while and its still better than many

FOR HOUSEHOLD PACKING.

Autumn Brings Its Bugbear of Pulling Up Stakes.

When one must move, begin with the small, out of sight tasks that will not render the house untidy and uncomfortable long before leaving it. A little thought and a look around the house will disclose many of the belongings that are not in general use—for instance, stuff in the pantry, in the storeroom, superabundant grocery supplies, temporarily discarded clothing, superfluous ornaments, company porcelain and glassware, books, music and a thousand other things, all of which can be dislodged without destroying the appearance of the house while those abiding in the same will not be the wiser for it.

For packing kitchen utensils, jars of fruit, etc., tubs are best, for they have handles. A pot or kettle in the bottom might have several jars placed in it with bits of paper, hay or smaller articles, like knives and forks, to hold them steady, but be careful not to have anything to extend higher than the sides of the tub.

Barrels are best for the fine china and glass ware. When packing breakables, remember that every article must be prepared so that none of its surface is left exposed to pressure without support. Stuff all hollow articles as full as possible, surround all handles, stems, etc., by padding so thick that the article becomes, as nearly as possible, a solid ball. Cups and glasses should not be slipped inside each other unless well covered with padding. Plates and saucers may be made in a pile with stuffing between and the whole made solid by bands of muslin wound round them. Excelsior, hay and newspapers are all good packing material, but often kitchen towels, holders, underwear, etc., may be used to steady things and get themselves transported at the same time.

The Frightened Woman.

You are, let us say, a capable stenographer or a teacher. If through any untoward circumstances you should be bereft of one of the faculties necessary to your vocation, what would you do? Such things do happen, you know, and wise is the woman who cultivates a hobby or a vocation that employs other faculties than the ones she uses daily. If you know nothing else but teaching and should suddenly lose your hearing you would be stranded on the island of the helpless. If your daily work is of the manual sort, cultivate a hobby for something that requires mental effort. If your mental faculties are in use daily, give them a rest by doing some sort of manual work. Not only will you feel fresher in doing your own work, but you will have taken the first step in preparing yourself for any contingency that the future may hold.

USES FOR MINT.

Be Ingenious if You Would Wring All Its Flavor.

There are innumerable ways in which the ever present spearmint bud ought to be utilized besides for the regular mint jelly, ice or punch.

First—Boil a sprig with new potatoes, beans or peas.

Second—In spicing young beets add a sprig to the heated vinegar and spices, or in canning the same simply lay a few leaves in the top of the can before sealing.

Third—Chop finely and sprinkle, just before serving, over an iced fruit compote or over a sweet fruit salad.

Fourth—Used in the same way over a chicken or veal salad it gives a decidedly pungent flavor.

Fifth—Add, chopped fine, as you would parsley, to deviled eggs or ham.

Sixth—Chop coarsely and add three heaping tablespoonsful to one-half cup weak vinegar with brown sugar to taste, to serve with roast lamb.

Seventh—Last, there is no greater delicacy than candied mint leaves if one has the patience to make them successfully.

THE ENCHANTED SHELL.

Myra wandered along the beach, wishing very much that she might see a mermaid, or a merman, or at the very least a sea serpent. She was lonely and wanted something exciting to happen.

"If only the days of fairy tales were not over!" she sighed as she sat down in the hollow of the rocks and rested her curly head against some lovely seaweed dried by the sun. As she looked dreamily out to sea she was startled to hear some one singing close to her ear:

"Oh, don't you know the way
To the land of elf and fay,
To that fair strand of golden sand
Where it is always day?
Then follow, follow me
To my cave beneath the sea."

Myra delightedly raised her head to find that the song seemed to come from the mouth of a long conch shell lying close to her. As she gazed the shell grew larger and yet larger until it opened invitingly to her.

"Oh, this is too lovely!" cried the little girl, tripping into the shell without much hesitation.

As she tripped down the mysterious passage of the seashell the light grew more and more rosy, the music more beautiful. It was indeed like a song from fairyland which still led her on.

Suddenly the hall widened into a marvelous green chamber, in which grew wonderful sea flowers. On a throne made of pearl sat a very lovely lady, with long golden hair, pink cheeks, smiling eyes, robed in green with trimming of fluffy white, like the crest of a wave.

"You are right welcome, my child," she said to Myra, who stood abashed before such beauty. "I am the spirit of the seashell, and it is my voice which sings to little children whenever they bend their heads to listen. They who hear my song are never lonely again. They realize that the world of fairy lies very close to them."

As she spoke soft music sounded, and Myra seemed to be lifted up, up, up, until she found herself lying on the rocks just as she was when she first heard the song of the shell. As she sat up she caught sight of the shell and, snatching it up, carried it home with her, remembering the words of the fairy, "Those who hear my song will never be lonely again."

Middy blouse lines are idealized now for the betwixt and between girl. Combined with plaited or gored skirts, they make very trig looking frocks, suited for autumn school wear as well as for summer. Pongee, tussore, linen, jersey and other fabrics are used for the summer dresses and wool jersey, serge and gaberdine for the autumn school frock.

These dresses are sometimes made sleeveless so that a washable guimpe may be easily adjusted and removed. Platted collar and cuff frills are seen on these guimpes more often than lace, the edges finished with pleat or hemstitching. Chadlie, a material which always seems to stay in style for young girls' frocks, seems to need a touch of black velvet ribbon for a dainty finish.

Russian and middie blouses, seen in the shops, are generally accompanied by a platted or full matching skirt. In middie blouse types one of polka dotted raspberry lawn has a full gathered skirt. The blouse is fashioned with a round platted collar of white organdie, pleat edged, with cuffs to match. An organdie belt is the original note of this dress. Very pretty bright colored felt hats are also seen in the shops for little and big girls. They match in color the bright tones of their dresses. Small poke bonnet forms, rather jockey shaped, with a single feather or plume ornament in front, are also new. High Russian caps, covered with gathered silk, are finished with silk pompons on top and little clusters of silk roses posed at the sides.

Dresses for young girls remain very short. In extreme fashion they hardly come to the knee, while the more popular styles stop just below. Their simplicity makes them fly out prettily. The revived fashion of petticoats, which show with the awish of skirts, gives them a fluffy look.

STRONG APPEAL TO PATRIOTISM

Cardinal Gibbons Urges Doctrine of Americanism.

WARM PRAISE FOR REPUBLIC

Noted Churchman Says United States Is a Country Where There is Liberty Without License and Authority Without Despotism.

New York, Aug. 21.—Cardinal Gibbons delivered an address before a mass meeting at Madison Square Garden as one of the features of the Catholic week program of the American Federation of Catholic Societies. He said in part:

"You live in a republic where there is liberty without license and authority without despotism; and where the civil rulers hold over you the aegis of their protection without interfering with the God given rights of conscience.

"In view of the signal blessings you enjoy it is your duty to take an active, personal, vital interest in the welfare of your country. You should glory in her prosperity and be concerned at every adversity that may befall her.

"You should hold up the arms of those who are charged with the administration of public affairs, as the children of Israel held up the hands of Moses while he interceded for them before the Lord.

"The inspired word of God enjoins this loyalty to country and reverence for its rulers. The religion you profess demands this fealty. The constitution of your respective societies uphold it and I am sure that there is not a single fiber of your heart which does not pulsate with a genuine, undivided love for the republic and its sacred traditions.

"There are some pessimistic prophets who are in the habit of predicting the downfall of our republic. They are more frequently heard on the eve of a presidential election.

"I have been listening to these dire forebodings for more than fifty years; but on the morning after election we find the prophets sounded a false alarm, that the country is safe and that the government is transacting business at the same old stand."

Three princes of the Roman Catholic church, the papal delegate to the United States, the papal nuncio to Brazil, scores of bishops and other dignitaries, several hundred priests and thousands of laymen, participated in the celebration of a solemn pontifical high mass at St. Patrick cathedral.

The occasion was the informal opening of the fifteenth annual convention of the American Federation of Catholic societies and the sixty-first annual convention of the National Federation of German Catholics.

RESULT HINGES ON FOUR STATES

New York, New Jersey, Indiana and Connecticut Important.

VOTES IN FORMER CONTESTS

With Result Doubtful, It is Interesting to Watch These States, and if They Go Democratic Wilson is Sure to Win—If They Go Republican Hughes Will Be Successful.

By ARTHUR W. DUNN.

Washington, Aug. 21.—[Special.]—No one would seriously contend that any man could be elected president of the United States with the electoral votes of New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Indiana against him. I do not suppose any combination of states that will be made up for either of the candidates will leave out of consideration one or more of these states. For that reason it is interesting to note how these states have voted in past presidential elections.

Beginning in 1872, although scarcely a normal year, all four voted Republican. In 1876 all four were Democratic. In 1880 New York, Connecticut and Indiana voted Republican and New Jersey Democratic. In 1888 New York, Connecticut and Indiana were Republican and New Jersey Democratic. In 1892 all were Democratic. In 1896 all four were Democratic. In 1900, 1904 and 1908 all were Republican. In 1912 all were Democratic.

Nearly Always Together.

It will be noted that with the exception of two presidential years these four states have voted together. In 1884 New Jersey was Republican when the others were Democratic, but that was a close election, New York going Democratic by a plurality of only 1,200. Four years later New Jersey went Democratic when the others were Republican, but that was another close contest.

The same public sentiment that sways the great pivotal state of New York seems to permeate the adjoining states of Connecticut and New Jersey and also to affect the close state of Indiana.

Southern Republicans.

Senator Harding of Ohio, presiding at the meeting when Chairman Willcox was presented to the Republicans in congress, said that reports had been received which indicated that the solid south might be broken this year. In these days, when speaking politically, neither Maryland, West Virginia nor Missouri is usually included as a part of the solid south. The states which make up that region are the old slave states and should include Kentucky, because it has only once broken from its Democratic moorings in a presidential year.

At present there are only six Republican members from the states of the solid south, two each from Kentucky and Tennessee and one each from Virginia and North Carolina. If Harding's information is accurate there will be a gain in the house for the Republicans from these southern states.

"Fairly Well Known."

Former Speaker Cannon, making an inquiry in the house, remarked, "In my own district, where I am fairly well known from cartoons which have been printed from time to time." Uncle Joe is known in the Danville district by every adult person, and it was not only cartoons, but many other things, which made him familiar.

Will Miss Alfalfa Bill.

There will be regret over the loss of Alfalfa Bill Murray, who is reported defeated in Oklahoma. He is a philosopher and inclined to speak his mind. He did not always agree with the president, and that might have had something to do with his defeat. He was not fooled by the idea that universal peace can be established by an international tribunal, and there are too few men with courage of the same opinion in congress.

Demand Immigration Bill.

With a grin humor that he does not display in debate Senator Clarke of Arkansas put in the Record many communications demanding the passage of the immigration bill. He no doubt had in mind the idea of showing that the demand came from one source, for these letters were from labor unions of all kinds. One letter gives the whole thing away by stating that "we have received instructions from Sam Gompers to take action." Clarke wanted to let senators know where the pressure came from.

Harding's Small Audience.

Senator Harding of Ohio began making a speech in the senate by addressing by name and state each individual senator present, there happening to be only eight members of the ninety-six in the chamber at the time. Harding wanted to emphasize the lack of interest in this important measure. But it might have been almost any other bill, for senators show a great lack of interest in the senate proceedings. They are tired of the session.

Members in White.

Four-fifths of the members of the house appear in white or near white clothes these days. They range from white duck to linen, including pongee, cream colored flannels, Palm Beach and all other kinds of thin and cool garments.

WORLD'S RECORDS THE GOAL OF DARING DRIVERS.

Louis LeCocq, Eddie Hearne and "Wild Bill" Endicott, speed demons of first caliber, are certain to star at the Minnesota State Fair auto races.

A MONG the fifteen drivers entered in the auto races at the Minnesota State Fair, Sept. 4 to 9, none has won more honors than LeCocq, Hearne, and "Wild Bill" Endicott. They have gained such reputations as fearless and steady wheelmen that they are feared wherever they appear. Without a question these three men will make big inroads upon the $10,000 prize money which is to be given by the Fair. All three have entered the 75-mile continuation race, which is the big feature of the program.

SEAL OF OUR UNION

Uncle Sam's Mark When He Stamps Official Documents.

HISTORY OF ITS ADOPTION.

Franklin, Adams and Jefferson Were the Men Appointed by John Hancock to Prepare the Device For the Great Seal of the United States.

The founders of our government did nothing without careful deliberation, and we are told that the adoption of a seal for the United States was as carefully considered as the framing of the Declaration of Independence. It was adopted during the period of the Confederacy, several years before the adoption of the constitution, but not till after several years' deliberation.

On the 4th of July, 1776, after the Declaration of Independence had been finally acted upon, John Hancock, president of the congress, appointed Benjamin Franklin, John Adams and Thomas Jefferson a committee "to prepare a device for the great seal of the United States of America." A seal was not needed for ornament or show, but to certify the official commissions soon to be issued by the United States. The committee took up the matter at once.

Each of the members of the committee had some ideas of his own, and they called in an artist of Philadelphia to help them formulate a design. This artist was Pierre Simiotti, a patriotic Swiss, who was doing some excellent portrait painting in the then capital city of the country.

The Swiss drew a design, which was discussed by the committee, after which each member suggested additions or changes, which were incorporated by Jefferson in a report made to congress on Aug. 10, 1776. This report was in heraldic language, describing the shield, crest, dexter, legend, etc. The following is an extract of this report:

"The great seal should on one side have the arms of the United States of America, which arms should be as follows: The shield has six quarters—the first an enameled rose, for England; the second a thistle proper, for Scotland; the third a harp, for Ireland; the fourth a fleur-de-lis, for France; the fifth the imperial eagle, for Germany; the sixth the crowned lion, for Holland—pointing out the countries from which the colonies have been peopled."

After describing other details, as the Goddess of Liberty, the initial letters of the colonies, etc., the report said, "Crest, the eye of Providence in a radiant triangle, whose glory extends over the shield and beyond the figures; motto, 'E Pluribus Unum.'"

For some reason or other congress referred this device back to the committee for further report. Franklin had proposed for a motto "Rebellion to Tyrants is Obedience to God." Adams proposed Hercules leaning on a club, while all the virtues and nearly all the vices grouped about him in different attitudes. His design would have been a monstrosity and laughstock. Jefferson's composite design simplified matters, and it was he who suggested the motto "E Pluribus Unum."

This was in August, 1776. The war soon absorbed the attention and nothing further was done about the seal until March, 1779, when a committee of three was appointed to consider and report on the subject. This committee reported in favor of a shield with thirteen diagonal stripes, alternately red and white, a constellation of thirteen stars, a figure of Liberty and the motto "Helo vel Pace Paratus" ("Ready for war or for peace").

This report also was recommended, and it was nearly a year before the matter came up again. Not to follow through repeated discussions and rejections of several designs, the present seal was not adopted till June 20, 1782. It was the work of a young American artist, William Barton by name, who followed in many respects the design submitted by Jefferson six years before, but simplified it. He retained the eagle, a bundle of arrows in one talon and an olive branch in the other; the helmet with six bars or quarterings, signifying the six nationalities from which the country had been mainly peopled, and the motto "E Pluribus Unum," which survived all the discussions.

The designer said, "The motto alludes to the Union." He added in his explanation, "The escutcheon is borne on the breast of the American eagle, without any other support, to denote that the United States of America ought to rely on their own virtues."

The different executive departments of the government have each their own seal, but every commission signed by the president is stamped with the great seal of the United States, which is kept in the state department.—Washington Post.

JACKSON'S INAUGURATION.

Unwelcomed by Adams, but the People Made Things Pretty Lively.

It was on Feb. 11, the day the electoral votes were counted, that Jackson arrived in Washington and took up his residence at Gadsby's, an inn famous in stage coaching days. He declined to call upon President Adams, implying that he could not bring himself to touch the hand of a man who had attained office through unworthy means. He busied himself with the office seekers, who rushed to Washington in incredible numbers, likewise avoiding Adams to flock around the power that was to be. Adams, resenting this breach of etiquette, took no official or social notice of his successor and left the city on the 3d of March, neither he nor any member of his cabinet remaining to welcome Jackson to office.

On the morning of March 4 those fortunate to secure a commanding position on Capitol hill looked down upon Pennsylvania avenue alive with carts and carriages full of women and children, their male escorts walking beside them. At last a small company of men was seen marching compactly through this crowd up the middle of the avenue, one tall figure holding his hat, while the wind played through his willful gray locks. There was something military in the sight, something most un military in the rabble of people shouting themselves hoarse in acclaim of the spare, erect figure. It was an expression of popular will and popular trust that gripped the heart and sent an ache to the throats even of those who feared the "Tennessee barbarian" and his host.

After taking the oath of office Jackson returned to the White House on horseback, followed indiscriminately by white and black, rich and poor, men, women and children, who swarmed over the lawn and through the rooms of the executive mansion, where no police provision had been made for such an onslaught. The courageous old warrior was forced that day to do what he seldom did. He retreated and sought refuge in his old quarters at Gadsby's. Current rumor had it that a quantity of china and cut glass to the value of several thousand dollars was broken in an attempt to get refreshments to the multitude, and finally great tubs of punch were carried out in front of the house, but that "hogsheads would not have been enough."—Helen Nicolay in Century.

An Incident That Illustrates the Way of the Far East.

I had had experience with corruptible Turkish officers, and one day when barrack conditions became unendurable I went to the officer commanding our division, an old Arab from Larache who had been called from retirement at the time of the mobilization. He lived in a little tent near the mosque, where I found him squatted on the floor nodding drowsily over his comfortable paunch. As he was an officer of the old regime, I entered boldly, squatted beside him and told him my troubles. The answer came with an enormous shrug of the shoulders.

"You are serving the sultan. Hardship should be sweet."

"I should be more fit to serve him if I got more sleep and rest."

He waved a fat hand about the tent.

"Look at me! Here I am, an officer of rank and"—shooting a knowing look at me—"I have not even a nice blanket."

"A crime! A crime!" I interrupted. "To think of it, when I, a humble soldier, have dozens of them at home! I should be honored if you would allow me!"—My voice trailed off suggestively.

"How could you get one?" he asked.

"Oh, I have friends here in Safet, but I must be able to sleep in a nice place."

"Of course. Certainly. What would you suggest?"

"That hotel kept by the Jewish widow might do," I replied.

More amenities were exchanged, the upshot of which was that my four friends and I were given permission to sleep at the inn—a humble place, but infinitely better than the mosque. It was all perfectly simple.—Alexander Aaronsohn in Atlantic Monthly.

many times more than all the little houses put together, live the hacendado and his family. In the little houses live the peons.

The typical farm in Mexico is not of 100 acres, but of 1,000,000. In the state of Morelos twenty-eight hacendados own all the agricultural lands; twelve own nine-tenths of them. The territory of Quintana Roo, double the size of Massachusetts, is divided among eight companies. The greater portion of the state of Yucatan is held by thirty men, kings of sisal hemp. A major fraction of the agricultural and grazing lands of Chihuahua is owned by one family. Lower California, equal in size to Alabama, is nearly all held by five great corporations.

The 1,000,000 acre farms lie mostly fallow. Naturally a rich agricultural country, Mexico does not produce enough corn and beans to feed her own peon population. MOVED THE LOGGAN STONE.

Then He Had the Costly Job of Moving It Back Again.

Do you know what happens to the leucoclast who attempts to prove to the world that there is nothing in its pet superstitions? Did you ever hear the story of the British naval lieutenant who demonstrated the fact that there was nothing supernatural about the Loggan stone? Out there at the tip of Land's End, close to where the pirates of Penzance used to hold forth, the huge mass of rock rested on the top of the cliff, so delicately poised that a child could make it rock this way and that. A gust of wind would set it to vibrating, and yet for hundreds of years it had been believed that no earthly force could dislodge it from its position. Then along came the lieutenant, who laughed at all such silly superstition. He would prove to the deluded people of Cornwall that the Loggan stone could be dumped into the sea by the physical prowess of a few sturdy sailors.

Luckily for his position in the navy of his majesty, George IV., the lieutenant succeeded only in hurling the charmed rock a little way down the cliff, where it lodged in a shelving crevice, for such a howl went up, not only from the guides and tavern people who made a living off of the tourists who came to see the quivering boulder, but from the antiquaries and scientists who believed that the rock had been delicately poised there by the druid priests or that it illustrated a little understood force of nature, that the admiral sent word to the impious young officer that he would either restore the Loggan stone to its place or forfeit his. A derelict and a month's salary were required to set the stone in its place.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

Practical Religion.

The story is told of a little housemaid, far over the sea, who, when asked whether she realized that she was in any way different after uniting with the church from what she had been before, thought for an instant and then, smiling brightly, said, "Well, I sweep the corners." She could hardly have given a better demonstration of the reality of her religious life.—Christian Herald.

STRONG APPEAL TO PATRIOTISM

Cardinal Gibbons Urges Doctrine of Americanism.

WARM PRAISE FOR REPUBLIC

Noted Churchman Says United States Is a Country Where There Is Liberty Without License and Authority Without Despotism.

New York, Aug. 21.—Cardinal Gibbons delivered an address before a mass meeting at Madison Square Garden as one of the features of the Catholic week program of the American Federation of Catholic Societies. He said in part:

"You live in a republic where there is liberty without license and authority without despotism; and where the civil rulers hold over you the aegis of its protection without interfering with the God given rights of conscience.

"In view of the signal blessings you enjoy it is your duty to take an active, personal, vital interest in the welfare of your country. You should glory in her prosperity and be concerned at every adversity that may befall her.

"You should hold up the arms of those who are charged with the administration of public affairs, as the children of Israel held up the hands of Moses while he interceded for them before the Lord.

"The inspired word of God enjoins this loyalty to country and reverence for its rulers. The religion you profess demands this fealty. The constitution of your respective societies uphold it and I am sure that there is not a single fiber of your heart which does not pulsate with a genuine, undivided love for the republic and its sacred traditions.

"There are some pessimistic prophets who are in the habit of predicting the downfall of our republic. They are more frequently heard on the eve of a presidential election.

"I have been listening to these dire forebodings for more than fifty years; but on the morning after election we find the prophets sounded a false alarm, that the country is safe and that the government is transacting business at the same old stand."

Three princes of the Roman Catholic church, the papal delegate to the United States, the papal nuncio to Brazil, scores of bishops and other dignitaries, several hundred priests and thousands of laymen, participated in the celebration of a solemn pontifical high mass at St. Patrick cathedral.

The occasion was the informal opening of the fifteenth annual convention of the American Federation of Catholic societies and the sixty-first annual convention of the National Federation of German Catholics.

RESULT HINGES
ON FOUR STATES

New York, New Jersey, Indiana and Connecticut Important.

VOTES IN FORMER CONTESTS

With Result Doubtful, It is Interesting to Watch These States, and if They Go Democratic Wilson is Sure to Win—If They Go Republican Hughes Will Be Successful.

By ARTHUR W. DUNN.

Washington, Aug. 21.—[Special.]—No one would seriously contend that any man could be elected president of the United States with the electoral votes of New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Indiana against him. I do not suppose any combination of states that will be made up for either of the candidates will leave out of consideration one or more of these states. For that reason it is interesting to note how these states have voted in past presidential elections.

Beginning in 1872, although scarcely a normal year, all four voted Republican. In 1876 all four were Democratic. In 1880 New York, Connecticut and Indiana voted Republican and New Jersey Democratic. In 1888 New York, Connecticut and Indiana were Republican and New Jersey Democratic. In 1892 all were Democratic. In 1896, 1900, 1904 and 1908 all were Republican. In 1912 all were Democratic.

Nearly Always Together.

It will be noted that with the exception of two presidential years these four states have voted together. In 1884 New Jersey was Republican when the others were Democratic, but that was a close election, New York going Democratic by a plurality of only 1,200. Four years later New Jersey went Democratic when the others were Republican, but that was another close contest.

The same public sentiment that sways the great pivotal state of New York seems to permeate the adjoining states of Connecticut and New Jersey and also to affect the close state of Indiana.

Southern Republicans.

Senator Harding of Ohio, presiding at the meeting when Chairman Wilcox was presented to the Republicans in congress, said that reports had been received which indicated that the solid south might be broken this year. In these days, when speaking politically, neither Maryland, West Virginia nor Missouri is usually included as a part of the solid south. The states which make up that region are the old slave states and should include Kentucky, because it has only once broken from its Democratic moorings in a presidential year.

At present there are only six Republican members from the states of the solid south, two each from Kentucky and Tennessee and one each from Virginia and North Carolina. If Harding's information is accurate there will be a gain in the house for the Republicans from these southern states.

"Fairly Well Known."

Former Speaker Cannon, making an inquiry in the house, remarked, "In my own district, where I am fairly well known from cartoons which have been printed from time to time." Uncle Joe is known in the Danville district by every adult person, and it was not only cartoons, but many other things, which made him familiar.

Will Miss Alfalfa Bill.

There will be regret over the loss of Alfalfa Bill Murray, who is reported defeated in Oklahoma. He is a philosopher and inclined to speak his mind. He did not always agree with the president, and that might have had something to do with his defeat. He was not fooled by the idea that universal peace can be established by an international tribunal, and there are too few men with courage of the same opinion in congress.

Demand Immigration Bill.

With a grim humor that he does not display in debate Senator Clarke of Arkansas put in the record many communications demanding the passage of the immigration bill. He no doubt had in mind the idea of showing that the demand came from one source, for these letters were from labor unions of all kinds. One letter gives the whole thing away by stating that "we have received instructions from Sam Gompers to take action." Clarke wanted to let senators know where the pressure came from.

Harding's Small Audience.

Senator Harding of Ohio began making a speech in the senate by addressing by name and state each individual senator present, there happening to be only eight members of the ninety-six in the chamber at the time. Harding wanted to emphasize the lack of interest in this important measure. But it might have been almost any other bill, for senators show a great lack of interest in the senate proceedings. They are tired of the session.

Members in White.

Four-fifths of the members of the house appear in white or near white clothes these days. They range from white duck to linen, including pongee, cream colored flannels, Palm Beach and all other kinds of thin and cool garments.

Out there at the tip of Land's End, close to where the pirates of Penzance used to hold forth, the huge mass of rock rested on the top of the cliff, so delicately poised that a child could make it rock this way and that. A gust of wind would set it to vibrating, and yet for hundreds of years it had been believed that no earthly force could dislodge it from its position. Then along came the lieutenant, who laughed at all such silly superstition. He would prove to the deluded people of Cornwall that the Logan stone could be dumped into the sea by the physical prowess of a few sturdy sailors.

Luckily for his position in the navy of his majesty, George IV., the lieutenant succeeded only in hurling the charmed rock a little way down the cliff, where it lodged in a shelving crevice, for such a howl went up, not only from the guides and tavern people who made a living off of the tourists who came to see the quivering boulder, but from the antiquaries and scientists who believed that the rock had been delicately poised there by the druid priests or that it illustrated a little understood force of nature, that the admiralty sent word to the impious young officer that he would either restore the Logan stone to its place or forfeit his. A derelict and a month's salary were required to set the stone in its place.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

Practical Religion.

The story is told of a little housemaid, far over the sea, who, when asked whether she realized that she was in any way different after uniting with the church from what she had been before, thought for an instant and then, smiling brightly, said, "Well, I sweep the corners." She could hardly have given a better demonstration of the reality of her religious life.—Christian Herald.

"Have you written all the invitations to my party, mamma?" queried little Eva.

"Yes, dear," answered her mother. "They are all written and mailed."

Work of a Beacon.

There is a flashing beacon on Richardson rock, a wave swept spot west of the Santa Barbara islands, California, which, without attention, will dash its warnings every three seconds for seven months, or over 6,000,000 flashes, before it requires recharging with gas.—Argonaut.

GAME BREAKS UP IN ROW

With Score 2 to 1 in Brainerd's Half of the Eighth, Umpire Grimstad Makes Bum Decision

CALLS TANNER OUT ON FIRST

First Baseman Russ Had Feet Off the Base and Speared Ball out of the Dirt

Sunday's game with Ironton broke up in a dispute in Brainerd's half of the eighth inning and all bets were off.

With the score 2 to 1 in favor of Ironton, Brainerd in its half of the eighth inning protested the decision of Grimstad, Ironton's umpire, calling Tanner out on first, Brainerd claiming First Baseman Russ had his feet off the bag and also juggled the ball and speared it from the dirt.

Manager A. H. Proctor, of the range nine, agreed to refer it to Umpire in Chief, Kylo, of Brainerd, who said, "Safe," and then the game broke up.

The Ironton men walked off the field.

"Is this a game or is it not?" asked Val Murlowski, one of the most loyal fans Brainerd has and whose throat is sore a week yelling at the games.

"If it's not a game, I ought to get my money back," said another.

Brainerd had ten hits off Smith of the famous Smith and Schmidt battery, but they didn't happen to be placed right.

Brainerd's fire continued to rise throughout the game at the decisions of Grimstad. Twice he called Brainerd runners out at second, the ball having been whipped to the tall second baseman, Menice, who like Goldsmith's classic, did not wish to stoop to conquer. Merely snapping a ball to second puts out no man unless forced out. Other disputable decisions were made at first.

The finishing blow came in the eighth.

"Well, that's enough of that," said Cook, and the crowd echoed it.

Prominent citizens of Brainerd, C. W. Koering and others, who stood near the first base line or were in the bleachers within a few feet of the base, will swear and make affidavit that Russ was three feet from the base with his feet and that he dropped the ball and speared it up out of the dirt.

Ironton scored in the first inning. Tanner dropped Swalm's third strike and Swalm made first on the error. Victor's bunt advanced him to second. Benda made a poor throw to first of Menice's blow and Swalm scored.

Ironton's second run came in the third. Paulson got a pass to first. Swalm bunted. Victor flew to Longley in center field. Menice's two-bagger brought in Paulson.

Brainerd's run was made in the third inning. Benda and Cook hit and Wines brought in the shortstop.

Ironton flashed a double play in the seventh. On a measly little infield hit Longley made first. Benda followed with a heart breaking infield hit near the third base line. Coop popped up an infield fly, as he seemed to think that line of stuff appeared to go good. But he flew out. Wines came to the bag and pounded out a vicious liner which Third Baseman Campbell grabbed and then snapped the ball to Second Baseman Menice, catching Longley off the bag.

The score, incomplete, as far as the game was played:

Ironton . . . 101 000 00-2 2 2
Brainerd . . . 001 000 00-1 10 2

Brainerd had Smith sized up and the eighth inning was due for a Brainerd rally, but the decision of the umpire caused a feeling of anger and the flames were fanned by the action of the range men, who refused to concede their umpire had made a mistake.

At the game Ironton was represented by thirty cars, Deerwood six cars, Crosby ten, Verndale one and Oslo one.

I. W. W. MEN ARE ON TRIAL

Charged with Inciting Riot and with Committing Assault at Crosby on August 11

L. P. BLANCHETT ON STAND

Identifies one of the Five as the Man Who Knocked Him Down and Kicked Him

John Perich, I. W. W. agitator and leader, Daniel Evelich, Enial Vishnich, Vosen Adubritche and Mike Popovich, charged with inciting riot and assault at Crosby, are having their hearing in the municipal court before Judge Gustav Halvorson.

The first witness called was L. P. Blanchett, of Crosby. He told of the happenings the morning of August 11 when he walked past the Sewall hospital and about three blocks west was assaulted. He passed a bunch of men, some 15 or 20, who were talking of the strike. Near them were a number of deputies. When some forty feet away, a man struck and knocked him down. He got up and was knocked down again. His assailant yelled, "Go back."

"I'm going home," said Blanchett. Then he was kicked, and his assailant ran back to the bunch.

Three minutes later he heard some twenty shots fired and they came from the direction of the crowd of men.

"Do you know the man who struck you and knocked you down and kicked you?" asked County Attorney S. E. Alderman. "Would you know him if you saw him?" he asked.

"I would," said Blanchett. The five under arrest were ordered to stand and Blanchett identified Mike Popovich as the one who had assaulted him.

The court room is filled with witnesses and others eager to hear the trial. Outside the corridors of the new city hall are jammed.

CHARITY WORKER BRANDED FAKE

Solicitor for "The Children's National Tuberculosis Society" Operated in Brainerd

O. K. FROM CHAMBER COMMERCE

Flashed Card from Chamber Giving her Permission to Solicit Here—Little Falls Report

The Brainerd Chamber of Commerce gave a card to a solicitor of "The Children's National Tuberculosis Society" which has headquarters in Chicago. On the strength of the card she canvassed Brainerd and it is not known how much she collected.

Little Falls and Sauk Centre people brand her as a fake. She called at the Dispatch office and tried to get a subscription from the reporter. The latter had no money, but offered to write her up and the society she represented.

"Oh," she said, "I couldn't think of it. You can do it some other time."

"Never heard of your society," said the Dispatch man.

"Why, I have come here for years," she said.

After considerable persuasion, she gave her name, which was Miss May Conroy.

Now comes the Little Falls Transcript with this story, headed "Charity Worker Branded a Fake":

Local residents have been advised by Sauk Centre people of the operations in that territory of a woman claiming to represent "The Children's National Tuberculosis society" which has headquarters in Chicago. The society upon investigation made by Dr. A. F. Moynihan, is claimed to be a fake.

The woman is described as being about 30 or 35 years of age, medium height, plump and was dressed in a gray tight fitting skirt, pink waist and a broad sloping brimmed straw hat. She was told to get out of Sauk Centre and apparently did so. She has not yet been operating here so far as could be learned.

At the Best

Pauline Barry, in the cast of "Sins of Men," shown tonight at the Best theatre, is a Boston girl who has won beauty contests galore. She is another "early bird" who caught the worm of dramatic success, for Miss Barry at the age of five years played her first part with Joseph Jefferson in "Rip Van Winkle." Now "Little Meenie" is a full-grown actress, but not so very—she was born in 1897. But in reality she began earlier, but not of her own volition. She was carried on the stage to "act" a baby part at the early age of six months in the opera "Fra Diavolo."

Tomorrow at the Best, "The Children in the House" will be the feature. From the dreary slums of a great city to the most entrancing realms of fairyland is the far reach of the scenes shown in the new Triangle-Fine Arts release, "The Children in the House," in which Norma Talmadge is featured. The story is one of love, deception, parting, reunion and a final renunciation by two people who put honor above affection, the governing factor being the children of the woman who has married a man unworthy of her respect. Because of them, she sends out of her life the man for whom she really cares. Miss Talmadge conveys a wonderful appeal in the principal role, and some remarkable work is done by the noted "Fine Arts children," principal among them George Stone, Carmen de Rue, Francis Carpenter and Ninon Poytler.

TRAGIC DEATH OF A WOMAN

Mrs. Andrew Johnson, of Jenkins. Age about 56, Died of Heart Disease and Found in Corn Field

SHE LAY THERE EIGHT HOURS

Deputy Coroner Neil O'Brien Called. Said Death Resulted from Natural Causes

Deputy Coroner Neil O'Brien was called to Jenkins Sunday where Mrs. Andrew Johnson, aged about 56, was found dead in the corn field of her home three miles from Jenkins near White Fish lake. Her face was scarred when found and the body was discovered by her husband 15 rods from the house. She is believed to have passed away about 9 Saturday morning and was found at 5 in the afternoon.

The coroner ascribed death to natural causes: The Johnsons had formerly lived near Jenkins, then removed to Chicago and later back to Jenkins. Their children are all grown up.

On the eventful Saturday, Mr. Johnson had taken some relations to the train in the village and returned home late. Persistent search on his part eventually located his wife, and he was horrified to find her face down in the corn patch where death came with no one near.

The funeral will be held Tuesday afternoon, with services at Jenkins and burial at Pequot.

GOT THE HORSES ASHORE.

And He Didn't Go About It in the Regular Official Way, Either.

In his younger days Sir Bryan Mahon was quite a character in the army and many are the tales that are told of his daredevil recklessness and his no less ready resourcefulness in an emergency.

Once, for instance, a lot of horses had to be unloaded at Ismailia. There were no boats and there was shortage of slings, to say nothing of grommets, breast girths and all the other queer paraphernalia that disembarking officers delight in.

But Mahon, who is, of course, a son of Erin's isle, had seen horses disembarked on the wild Irish coast many and many a time in rough and ready fashion, and he knew what they could do when they had to. So, while the others were discussing ways and means below decks, he simply threw these horses overboard.

The animals promptly swam ashore, and while the horror stricken disembarking officer was looking on aghast, too surprised even for words, Mahon ordered the trumpet for "stables" to be sounded, and every horse promptly lined up on the beach.—London Telegraph.

One night Charles XII. was surprised in Poland by an attacking army of 8,000 when his scant force of 600 was sleeping like the dead from the exhaustion of a hard march. Before his outposts and sentinels could be driven

Famous White Bull Dog of P. D. O'Brien Succumbed to Pneumonia in Hot Weather

"Bryan," famous white bull dog of P. D. O'Brien, was gathered unto the land of his fathers in the hot spell, succumbing to pneumonia. Now that "Rags" had an extended write-up, it is but meet and proper that O'Brien's bull dog gets a mention too.

"Bryan" was more of a home body than "Rags" and had not developed such a penchant for baseball. His domain was Laurel street and he were scars gained in protecting his sphere of influence.

A courier, small boy it was, rushed into the Dispatch office with the news that "Dash" was dead. He was owned by Harry Cregar and died Sunday and is now on his way to dog heaven. He was a favorite of all south side kids. He died at the mature age of 14 years.

CHARITY WORKER BRANDED FAKE

Solicitor for "The Children's National Tuberculosis Society" Operated in Brainerd

O. K. FROM CHAMBER COMMERCE

Flashed Card from Chamber Giving her Permission to Solicit Here—Little Falls Report

The Brainerd Chamber of Commerce gave a card to a solicitor of "The Children's National Tuberculosis Society" which has headquarters in Chicago. On the strength of the card she canvassed Brainerd and it is not known how much she collected.

Little Falls and Sauk Centre people brand her as a fake. She called at the Dispatch office and tried to get a subscription from the reporter. The latter had no money, but offered to write her up and the society she represented.

"Oh," she said, "I couldn't think of it. You can do it some other time."

"Never heard of your society," said the Dispatch man.

"Why, I have come here for years," she said.

After considerable persuasion, she gave her name, which was Miss May Conroy.

Now comes the Little Falls Transcript with this story, headed "Charity Worker Branded a Fake":

Local residents have been advised by Sauk Centre people of the operations in that territory of a woman claiming to represent "The Children's National Tuberculosis society" which has headquarters in Chicago. The society upon investigation made by Dr. A. F. Moynihan, is claimed to be a fake.

The woman is described as being about 20 or 35 years of age, medium height, plump and was dressed in a gray tight fitting skirt, pink waist and a broad sloping blimmed straw hat. She was told to get out of Sauk Centre and apparently did so. She has not yet been operating here so far as could be learned.

Wedding Postponed

Minneapolis, Aug. 21.—Just to prove the old adage about the course of true love, Gayle Aitken, Jr., New Orleans, married Charlotte Sherwood Rankin, daughter of Prof. A. W. Rankin, Minnesota university today. Aitken's wedding was postponed by militia mobilization and again by his sickness.

Remove Fire Alarm Boxes

Minneapolis, Aug. 21.—It was found necessary to remove fire alarm boxes from some foreign districts today. That's because the men in these districts fight. The women get scared and thinking of the first thing that's official, turn in a fire alarm. Sometimes a stream of water will stop the fight, too, but it costs too much, and so the boxes are being removed.

Empress Theatre

In announcing the booking of "Gloria's Romance" for the Empress theatre, Manager Workman believes that he has arranged for the best film attraction for his patrons that money can secure. Billie Burke, the fascinating international star, has been secured as the star of the production, though it took a salary of $4,000.00 per week to induce the titian-haired Billie to place her name on the dotted line of a contract calling for her appearance in the story. The scenario of "Gloria's Romance" originated in the minds of those famous novelists, Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes, who are known to people everywhere through their successful stories in the Saturday Evening Post Cosmopolitan Magazine and the Red Book, for nearly everyone has read "What Will People Say?" "Clipped Wings" or "The Thirteenth Commandment"—and Mr. Hughes himself declared that "Gloria's Romance" is the best of them all.

At the Best

Pauline Barry, in the cast of "Sins of Men," shown tonight at the Best theater, is a Boston girl who has won beauty contests galore. She is another "early bird" who caught the worm of dramatic success, for Miss Barry at the age of five years played her first part with Joseph Jefferson in "Rip Van Winkle." Now "Little Moente" is a full-grown actress, but not so very—she was born in 1897. But in reality she began earlier, but not of her own volition. She was carried on the stage to "act" a baby part at the early age of six months in the opera "Fra Diavolo."

Tomorrow at the Best, "The Children in the House" will be the feature. From the dreary slums of a great city to the most entrancing realms of fairyland is the far reach of the scenes shown in the new Triangle-Fine Arts release, "The Children in the House," in which Norma Talmadge is featured. The story is one of love, deception, parting, reunion and a final renunciation by two people who put honor above affection, the governing factor being the children of the woman who has married a man unworthy of her respect. Because of them, she sends out of her life the man for whom she really cares. Miss Talmadge conveys a wonderful appeal in the principal role, and some remarkable work is done by the noted "Fine Arts children," principal among them George Stone, Carmen de Rue, Francis Carpenter and Ninon Povierl.

TRAGIC DEATH OF A WOMAN

Mrs. Andrew Johnson, of Jenkins, Age about 56, Died of Heart Disease and Found in Corn Field

SHE LAY THERE EIGHT HOURS

Deputy Coroner Neil O'Brien Called. Said Death Resulted from Natural Causes

Deputy Coroner Neil O'Brien was called to Jenkins Sunday where Mrs. Andrew Johnson, aged about 56, was found dead in the corn field of her home three miles from Jenkins near White Fish lake.

Her face was scarred when found and the body was discovered by her husband 15 rods from the house. She is believed to have passed away about 9 Saturday morning and was found at 5 in the afternoon.

The coroner ascribed death to natural causes. The Johnsons had formerly lived near Jenkins, then removed to Chicago and later back to Jenkins. Their children are all grown up.

On the eventful Saturday, Mr. Johnson had taken some relations to the train in the village and returned home late. Persistent search on his part eventually located his wife, and he was horrified to find her face down in the corn patch where death came with no one near.

The funeral will be held Tuesday afternoon, with services at Jenkins and burial at Pequot.

GOT THE HORSES ASHORE.

And He Didn't Go About It in the Regular Official Way, Either.

In his younger days Sir Bryan Mahon was quite a character in the army and many are the tales that are told of his daredevil recklessness and his no less ready resourcefulness in an emergency.

Once, for instance, a lot of horses had to be unloaded at Ismailia. There were no boats and there was shortage of slings, to say nothing of grommets, breast girths and all the other queer paraphernalia that disembarking officers delight in.

But Mahon, who is, of course, a son of Erin's life, had seen horses disembarked on the wild Irish coast many and many a time in rough and ready fashion, and he knew what they could do when they had to. So, while the others were discussing ways and means below decks, he simply threw these horses aboard.

The animals promptly swam ashore, and while the horror stricken disembarking officer was looking on aghast, too surprised even for words, Mahon ordered the trumpet for "stables" to be sounded, and every horse promptly lined up on the beach.—London Telegraph.

Secret of the Military Success of "the Madman of the North"

From drill man gets accustomed to doing under any circumstances what has been hammered into his brain time after time till it becomes second nature to him.

Charles XII. of Sweden, "the madman of the north," ripped most of Europe up the back again and again because his soldiers were drilled to perfection before he let them take the field at a time when there was great neglect of drill in other armies. He valued 1,000 well drilled fighters above 10,000 not so well drilled, and madman or genius, his judgment was vindicated repeatedly in terrible battles.

One night Charles XII. was surprised in Poland by an attacking army of 8,600 when his scant force of 600 was sleeping like the dead from the exhaustion of a hard march. Before his outposts and sentinels could be driven

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

CHILD LABOR BILL IN SUPREME COURT

Constitutionality of Measure to Be Reviewed.

POPULAR SENTIMENT RULES

If Court Finds It Unconstitutional, Then the Constitution Will Probably Be Amended—People Want to Stop Working Young Children in Factories and Mines.

By ARTHUR W. DUNN.

Washington, Aug. 18.—[Special.]—After 130 years of construction it would seem that the constitution of the United States might be fairly well constructed by this time, but every time an opportunity is offered there is a long and tedious discussion of constitutional questions in the senate. The supreme court is constantly called upon to interpret constitutional meanings.

The child labor bill is going to be carried to that court to decide whether or not it is constitutional. After having held valid the lottery law, the pure food law and the white slave law, it seems likely that the court will decide that the child labor law is constitutional.

Courts and Sentiment.

Courts must allow a pronounced public sentiment to prevail. If they do not the constitution will be amended or the courts will be changed. The change which has occurred in the senate on the subject is likely to have permeated the minds of members of the court. At all events, if the court does not hold the law constitutional there will be a speedy amendment of that document, for if there is any one thing that seems to be determined it is that the people want to stop working young children in factories and mines.

Burdening the Mails.

It has been frequently asserted that newspapers and periodicals receive a subsidy because they are granted a one cent rate in the mails. But it sometimes develops that much free matter is carried in the mails under an abuse of the franking privilege. One senator not long ago showed that by the publication and circulating of one document the government had been put to an expense of $50,000 and another document cost the government $75,000. Both of these publications were purely advertising matter and sent out for advertising purposes.

There are many publications by cranks and persons who could get their ideas into type in no other way than through the government printing office, and then they get them to the people by free carriage.

Read Told a Story.

Senator Read of Missouri told the senate about "holding the bag," the game which country boys play on city boys under the guise of snipe hunting. He told it for the purpose of illustrating his idea of how Colonel Roosevelt had treated the bull moose, concluding with a remark which one of the herd uttered after the Chicago convention.

"Well," said this man, "I'm one of the suckers Roosevelt took out snipe hunting, but I'm dinged if I'm going to carry the game home to him!"

Bite of "Pork."

If care were exercised it would be found that in making vast preparations for the army and navy different senators and representatives have not neglected the "pork" possibilities. Army posts and navy yards in various parts of the country near the homes of influential members have been well cared for. Whenever there are large expenditures there are sure to be plenty of men getting their "bit."

Not as Near as Champ.

Speaker Clark, delivering an address upon the unveiling of a piece of statuary accepted by the house, referred to his pride in the Monroe doctrine and mentioned William H. Seward.

"Seward was a great man," said Champ, "and came near being president in 1860, but not half as near as I did in 1912."

That is one matter Champ can never forget. No man in recent years came so near the great prize as he did four years ago. It was almost within the grasp of Henry Clay, and James G. Blaine missed it by the narrowest kind of margin. Champ Clark seemed so sure—and then failed. No wonder he is sore.

Fun With Penrose.

Since his return to the senate Senator Penrose has been insistent about a quorum and at times critical of the majority for not maintaining a quorum. One day John Sharp Williams, who likes Penrose, had this to say about the Pennsylvania:

"As I grow older I sometimes think that I fall in my memory, but I have regained confidence. The other day when the senator from Pennsylvania came into this body, notwithstanding the long lapse of time, I recognized him at once, and a great many senators complimented me on knowing who he was without taking time to study his features."

Roasted Roosevelt.

Senator Thomas of Colorado in a roast on Roosevelt for supporting Hughes said: "The great Progressive party has been destroyed by the man to whom its destiny was entrusted. He betrayed and then asphyxiated it. The belemoth of the bull moose is the greatest opportunist of the race." And so on for a column or more.

BASEBALL AT MINNESOTA STATE FAIR

SHORT COURSE FOR WOMEN WHO LOSE

Minnesota State Fair to Assist Exhibitors in Learning Some of Fine Points.

Exhibitors in the woman's department at the Minnesota State Fair, Sept. 4 to 9, are to be invited to attend a short course at the close of the fair in which specialists will tell them how to be successful in winning premiums at future State Fairs. The judges of the cooking, sewing, and other kinds of women's work will be the instructors.

A women's and misses' style show promises to be one of the most interesting features of the woman's department this year. It is to be put on under supervision of the Minnesota Agricultural College, co-operating with the fair.

A Bevy of Girls.

A bevy of pretty girls from the University of Minnesota will pose as models. Divided into groups, these young women will present the latest fashions in house dresses for evening wear, work dresses, and gowns for shopping and church going. The girl who is going away to school will obtain inspiration from the large assortment of going-away dresses. School, Sunday and play dresses for children from six to twelve years of age will be worn by girl models. In every instance gowns in good and bad taste will be shown, to enforce the point by contrast.

A large raised platform in the Woman's Building will be used for the show. One hour in the morning and one hour in the afternoon of each day will be devoted to it. A specialist on styles, who has had eighteen years of experience as a purchasing agent for women in the country and small towns, will be in charge. Short talks on seasonal buying will be given by her, in which she will tell when bargains in bed linens, rugs, table linens, furniture, and other household equipment can be obtained.

Building Remodeled.

The Woman's Building is being completely remodeled and repainted. The exhibits will be arranged more tastefully than in previous years.

MANY BANDS COMING

Splendid Musical Program Prepared for the Minnesota State Fair.

Nine noted bands, four orchestras, two quartettes, and a drum corps have been engaged to furnish music at the Minnesota State Fair, Sept. 4 to 9, which is the most pretentious music program ever undertaken by the fair board.

The Minnesota State Band and the Minnesota First Field Artillery Band will be the feature bands of the fair. The Granite City Band, of St. Cloud, Minn., and the Orpheus Concert Band, of Springfield, Minn., will play the first three days. The Brook Park Band and the Waseca Band, both Minnesota organizations, will play the last three days. The Nashua-Keevatin School Band will play the first five days. The C. A. Wertham Shows Concert Band, of San Antonio, Texas, will be at Hamline the entire week.

The Koolakal Hawaiian Orchestra, of Chicago, one of the most famous orchestras in America; Kalkbrenner's Orchestra, of Lake City, Minn.; and the Longfellow and Northwestern Mandolin and Guitar Orchestras, both of St. Paul, will furnish music in the Exposition buildings. The Morgan G. A. R. Drum Corps, of Minneapolis, will play Wednesday and Thursday.

The Chicago Grand Opera quartette, of Chicago, and the Minnesota Ladies' Quartette, of Minneapolis, will sing the entire week.

A MODEL RURAL HOME.

Farm House at Minnesota State Fair Completely Furnished.

The model farm house, which was erected at the Minnesota State Fair a year ago, is being completely furnished and landscaped for exhibit purposes at the coming fair, Sept. 4 to 9. Specialists from the Minnesota Agricultural College have worked out the scheme for interior decoration. Visitors will be taken about the house, and booklets detailing the cost of construction will be given.

230 Independent Baseball Teams Entered in Hot Race for Minnesota Championship—Final Games Played During Fair Week, Sept. 4 to 9.

For the first time in the history of the sport, baseball has been given a leading role in the amusement program of a great state fair. The Minnesota State Fair, Sept. 4 to 9, is to stage a big baseball tournament the entire week to determine the independent championship of the state.

Over 230 teams from all parts of Minnesota have applied for an opportunity to compete for supreme honors. Elimination contests are now being conducted, which will render it necessary for only twenty or thirty of the best teams in the state to visit the State Fair for the big series. Nearly fifty towns and cities are arranging special trains and organizing big delegations to attend the final games. Many of them are planning to bring bands with them.

Big Cash Prizes.

All teams outside of the Twin Cities are divided into three classes. Teams from towns of less than 1,500 belong to Class C, the champion of this division being given $100 and a big trophy. Teams from towns between 1,500 and 5,000 belong to Class B, and the leader of this class will be awarded $150 and a loving cup. Teams from cities of more than 5,000, outside of the Twin Cities, belong to Class A, victory in this division carrying with it $200 and a large trophy.

All teams from the Twin Cities have been placed in Class AA, the winner being entitled to ownership of a silver cup. The St. Paul champion will meet the Minneapolis champion at the Minnesota State Fair, Sept. 4, which is Labor day. During the remainder of the week the champions of each division will fight it out for the independent championship of the state. Baseball fans predict that it will be one of the keenest contests ever staged in the Northwest. The champion of the state will be given a gigantic trophy.

Great Crowds Expected.

A diamond is being made inside of the half-mile track in front of the State Fair Grandstand, which holds approximately 25,000 persons. It is expected that some of the games will draw nearly that number of people, and the management is making preparations to handle the biggest Grandstand crowds in the history of the fair. It is probable that it will be necessary to play each morning and afternoon to dispose of all the claimants to championship honors.

No teams were permitted to enter the race after July 1. Each team was compelled to supply a list of eligible players by July 15, to prevent teams from stealing players from each other at the close of the season, when competition became intense. It was felt that this was the only arrangement which would protect the smaller teams from being beaten unfairly. Practically all the teams which entered July 1 furnished an eligibility list, insuring a big field of contestants for the final games.

BIG MACHINERY SHOW

Many New Features to Be Put on at Minnesota State Fair.

Many new features are planned for the machinery show at the Minnesota State Fair, Sept. 4 to 9. Manufacturers and dealers are entering scores of new inventions and improvements in the field of machinery for home, field, and factory.

To enable farmers to compare the leading small tractors operating under field conditions, a tractor demonstration is planned early in the week. A large plot of ground inside of the Fair Grounds is to be set aside for this purpose. Here the sixty or more tractors entered will be operated in competition with one another.

The cement products show is to be much larger and more pretentious than at any previous fair. Slabs are to be shown in large numbers. The 3,000,000 square feet of space on Machinery Hill, which covers approximately 75 acres, will be alive with thousands of machines of every nature in operation.

Enormous Sum Offered.

The premiums offered by the Minnesota State Fair, Sept. 4 to 9, aggregate $84,604.25, a larger sum than that presented by any other fair or exposition in America.

STATE TRUST FUNDS ALL ACCOUNTED FOR

St. Paul, Aug. 21.—Approximately $25,000,000 of state trust funds outstanding in loans to Minnesota municipalities and school districts is entirely and satisfactorily accounted for, according to Andrew Fritz, state public examiner.

"A special examination of the state treasury, made at the request of the state board of audit, has shown the loan record correct," Mr. Fritz said. "Every dollar is accounted for and there are no further shortages to be disclosed."

The statement was elicited by a report that $68,000 of loan funds were unaccounted for and that officials of three school districts denied loans of more than $2,000 charged to them and intimations of possible further shortages.

Spoons.

The origin of the spoon is uncertain. It must have been invented at a very ancient date, for it is found among people that have never come into contact with civilization. The necessity of having some implement for dipping water seems to have led first to the invention of the calabash or the use of the coconut shell and later on to the spoon.

ARSENAL FIRE LOSS SMALL

Responsibility for Blaze at Rock Island Not Determined.

Rock Island, Ill., Aug. 21.—Origin of the fire which destroyed a small laboratory building at Rock Island arsenal has not been determined. Commandant G. W. Burr, however, insists it was not the work of an incendiary. Ammunition stored in the building exploded, causing fear that an attempt was being made to blow up the arsenal, where there are great stores of army equipment and munitions.

The earrings of Biote, the daughter of Aristotle, which were found in Chalcis, where the young woman was buried, represented doves swinging in golden hoops. The miniature birds were marvelously wrought, the feathers of granulated gold, the wings and breasts enriched with bands of color supplied by inserted gems. Precious stones gleamed like tiny sparks for the eyes. Daintiest device of all, the tail feathers were so finely made and curiously adjusted as to move at the slightest motion of the pendant hoop, so that whenever the proud wearer should toss or shake her head her two attendant doves would seem to balance themselves upon their perches, as live birds do in swinging on a bough. They were found by exploring archaeologists.

CHILD LABOR BILL IN SUPREME COURT

Constitutionality of Measure to Be Reviewed.

POPULAR SENTIMENT RULES

If Court Finds It Unconstitutional, Then the Constitution Will Probably Be Amended—People Want to Stop Working Young Children in Factories and Mines.

By ARTHUR W. DUNN.

Washington, Aug. 18.—[Special.]—After 130 years of construction it would seem that the constitution of the United States might be fairly well con-structed by this time, but every time an opportunity is offered there is a long and tedious discussion of constitutional questions in the senate. The supreme court is constantly called upon to in-terpret constitutional meanings.

The child labor bill is going to be carried to that court to decide whether or not it is constitutional. After hav-ing held valid the lottery law, the pure food law and the white slave law, it seems likely that the court will decide that the child labor law is constitu-tional.

Courts and Sentiment.

Courts must allow a pronounced pub-lic sentiment to prevail. If they do not the constitution will be amended or the courts will be changed. The change which has occurred in the senate on the subject is likely to have permeated the minds of members of the court. At all events, if the court does not hold the law constitutional there will be a speedy amendment of that document, for if there is any one thing that seems to be determined it is that the people want to stop working young children in factories and mines.

Burdening the Mails.

It has been frequently asserted that newspapers and periodicals receive a subsidy because they are granted a one cent rate in the mails. But it sometimes develops that much free matter is carried in the mails under an abuse of the franking privilege. One senator not long ago showed that by the publication and circulating of one document the government had been put to an expense of $50,000 and an- other document cost the government $75,000. Both of these publications were purely advertising matter and sent out for advertising purposes.

There are many publications by cranks and persons who could get their ideas into type in no other way than through the government printing of- fice, and then they get them to the people by free carriage.

Reed Told a Story.

Senator Reed of Missouri told the senate about "holding the bag," the game which country boys play on city boys under the guise of snipe hunting. He told it for the purpose of illustrat-ing his idea of how Colonel Roosevelt had treated the bull moose, concluding with a remark which one of the herd uttered after the Chicago convention.

"Well," said this man, "I'm one of the suckers Roosevelt took out snipe hunting," but I'm dinged if I'm goin' to carry the game home to him!"

Bits of "Pork."

If care were exercised it would be found that in making vast preparations for the army and navy different sena-tors and representatives have not neglected the "pork" possibilities. Army posts and navy yards in various parts of the country near the homes of in-fluential members have been well cared for. Whenever there are large expenditures there are sure to be plen-ty of men getting their "bit."

Not as Near as Champ.

Speaker Clark, delivering an address upon the unrolling of a piece of stat-uary accepted by the house, referred to his pride in the Monroe doctrine and mentioned William H. Seward.

"Seward was a great man," said Champ, "and came near being pres-ident in 1860, but not half as near as I did in 1912."

That is one matter Champ can never forget. No man in recent years came so near the great prize as he did four years ago. It was almost within the grasp of Henry Clay, and James G. Blaine missed it by the narrowest kind of margin. Champ Clark seemed so sure—and then failed. No wonder he is sore.

Fun With Penrose.

Since his return to the senate Sena-tor Penrose has been insistent about a quorum and at times critical of the majority for not maintaining a quorum. One day John Sharp Williams, who likes Penrose, had this to say about the Pennsylvania:

"As I grow older I sometimes think that I fall in my memory, but I have regained confidence. The other day when the senator from Pennsylvania came into this body, notwithstanding the long lapse of time, I recognized him at once, and a great many sena-tors complimented me on knowing who he was without taking time to study his features."

Roasted Roosevelt.

Senator Thomas of Colorado in a roast on Roosevelt for supporting Hughes said: "The great Progressive party has been destroyed by the man to whom its destiny was entrusted. He betrayed and then asphyxiated it. The behest of the bull moose is the greatest opportunity of the race." And so on for a column or more.

BASEBALL AT MINNESOTA STATE FAIR

SHORT COURSE FOR WOMEN WHO LOSE

Minnesota State Fair to Assist Exhibitors in Learning Some of Fine Points.

Exhibitors in the woman's depart-ment at the Minnesota State Fair, Sept. 4 to 9, are to be invited to attend a short course at the close of the fair in which specialists will tell them how to be successful in winning premiums at future State Fairs. The judges of the cooking, sewing, and other kinds of women's work will be the instruc-tors.

A women's and misses' style show promises to be one of the most inter-esting features of the woman's depart-ment this year. It is to be put on under supervision of the Minnesota Agricultural College, co-operating with the Fair.

A Navy of Girls.

A bevy of pretty girls from the Uni-versity of Minnesota will pose as mod-els. Divided into groups, these young women will present the latest fashions in house dresses for evening wear, work dresses, and gowns for shopping and church going. The girl who is going away to school will obtain in-spiration from the large assortment of going-away dresses. School, Sunday and play dresses for children from six to twelve years of age will be worn by girl models. In every instance gowns in good and bad taste will be shown, to enforce the point by con-trast.

A large raised platform in the Wom-an's Building will be used for the show. One hour in the morning and one hour in the afternoon of each day will be devoted to it. A specialist on styles, who has had eighteen years of experi-ence as a purchasing agent for wom-en in the country and small towns, will be in charge. Short talks on season-able buying will be given by her, in which she will tell when bargains in bed linens, rugs, table linens, furni-ture, and other household equipment can be obtained.

Building Remodeled.

The Woman's Building is being completely remodeled and repainted. The exhibits will be arranged more tastefully than in previous years.

MANY BANDS COMING

Splendid Musical Program Prepared for the Minnesota State Fair.

Nine noted bands, four orchestras, two quartettes, and a drum corps have been engaged to furnish music at the Minnesota State Fair, Sept. 4 to 9, which is the most pretentious music program ever undertaken by the fair board.

The Minnesota State Band and the Minnesota First Field Artillery Band will be the feature bands of the fair. The Granite City Band, of St. Cloud, Minn., and the Orpheus Concert Band, of Springfield, Minn., will play the first three days. The Brook Park Band and the Waseca Band, both Minnesota organizations, will play the last three days. The Nashwauk-Keowatin School Band will play the first five days. The C. A. Wertham Shows Concert Band, of San Antonio, Texas, will be at Ham-line the entire week.

The Keokuk Hawaiian Orchestra, of Chicago, one of the most famous or-chestras in America; Kalkbrenner's Or-chestra, of Lake City, Minn.; and the Longfellow and Northwestern Mando-lin and Guitar Orchestras, both of St. Paul, will furnish music in the Expo-sition buildings. The Morgan G. A. R. Drum Corps, of Minneapolis, will play Wednesday and Thursday.

The Chicago Grand Opera quartette, of Chicago, and the Minnesota Ladies' Quartette, of Minneapolis, will sing the entire week.

A MODEL RURAL HOME.

Farm House at Minnesota State Fair Completely Furnished.

The model farm house, which was erected at the Minnesota State Fair a year ago, is being completely fur-nished and landscaped for exhibit pur-poses at the coming fair, Sept. 4 to 9. Specialists from the Minnesota Agri-cultural College have worked out the scheme for interior decoration. Visi-tors will be taken about the house, and booklets detailing the cost of con-struction will be given.

230 Independent Baseball Teams Entered in Hot Race for Minnesota Championship—Final Games Played During Fair Week, Sept. 4 to 9.

For the first time in the history of the sport, baseball has been given a leading role in the amusement pro-gram of a great state fair. The Min-nesota State Fair, Sept. 4 to 9, is to stage a big baseball tournament the entire week to determine the inde-pendent championship of the state.

Over 230 teams from all parts of Minnesota have applied for an oppor-tunity to compete for supreme honors. Elimination contests are now being conducted, which will render it neces-sary for only twenty or thirty of the best teams in the state to visit the State Fair for the big series. Nearly fifty towns and cities are arranging special trains and organizing big dele-gations to attend the final games. Many of them are planning to bring bands with them.

Big Cash Prizes.

All teams outside of the Twin Cit-ies are divided into three classes. Teams from towns of less than 1,500 belong to Class C, the champion of this division being given $100 and a big trophy. Teams from towns be-tween 1,500 and 5,000 belong to Class B, and the leader of this class will be awarded $150 and a loving cup. Teams from cities of more than 5,000, outside of the Twin Cities, belong to Class A, victory in this division carrying with it $200 and a large trophy.

All teams from the Twin Cities have been placed in Class AA, the winner being entitled to ownership of a silver cup. The St. Paul champion will meet the Minneapolis champion at the Min-nesota State Fair, Sept. 4, which is Labor day. During the remainder of the week the champions of each divi-sion will fight it out for the indepen-dent championship of the state. Base-ball fans predict that it will be one of the keenest contests ever staged in the Northwest. The champion of the state will be given a gigantic trophy.

Great Crowds Expected.

A diamond is being made inside of the half-mile track in front of the State Fair Grandstand, which holds approximately 25,000 persons. It is expected that some of the games will draw nearly that number of people, and the management is making pre-parations to handle the biggest Grand-stand crowds in the history of the fair. It is probable that it will be necessary to play each morning and afternoon to dispose of all the claim-ants to championship honors.

No teams were permitted to enter the race after July 1. Each team was compelled to supply a list of eligible players by July 15, to prevent teams from stealing players from each other at the close of the season, when com-petition became intense. It was felt that this was the only arrangement which would protect the smaller teams from being beaten unfairly. Practi-cally all the teams which entered July 1 furnished an eligibility list, in-suring a big field of contestants for the final games.

BIG MACHINERY SHOW

Many New Features to Be Put on at Minnesota State Fair.

Many new features are planned for the machinery show at the Minnesota State Fair, Sept. 4 to 9. Manufactur-ers and dealers are entering scores of new inventions and improvements in the field of machinery for home, field, and factory.

To enable farmers to compare the leading small tractors operating under field conditions, a tractor demonstra-tion is planned early in the week. A large plot of ground inside of the Fair Grounds is to be set aside for this purpose. Here the sixty or more trac-tors entered will be operated in com-petition with one another.

The cement products show is to be much larger and more pretentious than at any previous fair. Silos are to be shown in large numbers. The 3,000,000 square feet of space on Ma-chinery Hill, which covers approxi-mately 75 acres, will be alive with thousands of machines of every na-ture in operation.

Enormous Sum Offered.

The premiums offered by the Min-nesota State Fair, Sept. 4 to 9, aggre-gate $84,604.25, a larger sum than that presented by any other fair or expo-sition in America.
